Row over Golding's Nobel Prize

By a Staff Reporter

The British novelist William Golding was awarded the 1983 Nobel Prize for Literature sesterday, but in an unpre-cedented breach of the usual secrecy one of the Nobel scademicians publicly disagreed with the choice.

In its citation, the member academy said the 72-year-old novelist had won the prize for illuminating the human condition through the perspicuity of his realistic narrative and his use of Earlier there had been a hint that the academy session was a turbulent one Golding is the ninth British or Irish writer to win the prize since it was founded in 1901, and follows in the footsteps of Kipling, Yeats, Shaw, Gals-worthy, Eliot, Churchill, Russell, and Samuel Becket. The prize this year is worth 1.5 million kroner (£130.006).

Golding, who achieved in-stant fame with his first back Lord of the flies, went horseriding after learning of his prize to try to absorb the news. Last night, at his Wiltshire home, he said he feit "over-whelmed" by news of the award.

THE FASTEST MEN ON EARTH

The next Labour Government will repeal the Government's legislation on trade union law at the first opportunity, Mr Eric Varies, Speaking for the national execuspeaking to the national caccu-tive committee at the end of a debate on the White Paper, Democracy in Trade Unions. He said: "The projected legislation will bring state interference on a massive scale into the internal affairs of every trade union in Britain. If this every trace tinion in Seriam, it has happens we shall have government regulation that we have not seen since the Osborne judgment of 1910 which declared unlawful all political ctivity by the trade unions

The proposals on the political levy, it said, constituted an ominous threat to perliamentary democracy. Moving it, Mr Frank Davies, Furniture, Timber and Allied Trades, said the legislation was a bare-faced method of reducing the authority of the trade unions in their-efforts to assist their members. It was aimed at weakening the financial basis of the Labour Party. It was a threat to democracy. The party was struggling to reduce its overdraft and much of its income came from the unions. Mr Norman Tebbit's paper tiger was right at the heart of Labour's finances.

No efforts seemed to be necessary to democratize companies or to control their financial contributions to the Tory party.

Mr Eddie Haigh, Dyers,

Mr Terry Fields, MP for Liverpool, Broadgreen, said that when the Bill came before the Commons, the party should leave a rearguard to fight it and the rest of the MPs should be out on the streets fighting for their class the way Mrs Thatcher was fighting for hers.

Public spending bound to grow

The report considers the way in which the costs of the Government's public expenditure policies could develop over the rest of the decade, against background of some assumptions about economic developments over this period. Two economic scenarios

In considering the longer implications of the Government's public expenditure stance, the report first adopts a set of assumptions about productivity, inflation, growth and unemployment which would represent a substantial and continuing improvement on our recent national economic perform-ance. This is Scenario A.

The assumptions are that inflation will fall and remain at a modest level, that wage restraint, combined with lower tax rates and interest rates, produces rapid rebuilding of profit margins, that productivity continues to grow well, and that economic growth will as a result be sustained at a level well above what has recently been achieved. Such a performance implies an all-round improvement in our affairs, and may not be far short of the best we can expect.

But things may not turn out like this. The United Kingdom has long suffered from low efficiency and poor pro-ductivity, and there is still much to do to improve the flexibility and performance of the economy. We are highly dependent on what happens in the world economy.

It is accordingly necessary to look at public expenditure against the background of much favourable economic assumptions than in scenario A. In scenario B, the main differences from scenario A relate to productivity growth (1.5 per cent instead of 3 per cent per year in the decade to 1990), gpd growth (0.75 to 0.5 per cent instead of 2.5 per cent) and unemployment and inflation (which stick around their present levels instead of coming

But only limited allowance has been made for the likely increase, if national income grew as assumed in scenario A, in the public's demand for some of the public services, notably health, education, and environmental services, and for increasing real social security benefits. (Social security benefits, for example, are assumed to in-crease by less than earnings.)

International evidence suggests that this demand could increase on a significant scale. The Government is not obliged to meet it and may decide to divert it into privately provided services. But the scope for such diversion is limited over this period. And local authority expenditure, although projected to continue its relative decline may continue to be difficult to ECONOMIC SCENARIOS - MAIN ASSUMPTIONS 0.75% to 1985-86 1.5%

Tax cuts vital to bring about necessary economic growth

The longer term public jected expenditure to the end of the decade on two illustrative macroeconomic scenarios. This note describes a similar projection of tax revenue on each of the same scenarios, and goes on to look at the balance between revenue and expenditure that is Like expenditure, taxes have been projected on the basis of unchanged policy. This has been interpreted to mean that income tax thresholds and specific duties are raised in line with prices, that tax rates are unchanged and that existing allowances and reliefs are continued. Local authority rates and National Insurance Contributions are calculated from the projections of local authority expenditure and expenditure from the National Insurance respectively, on the assumption that an unchanged roportion of such expenditure is met from general taxation. For North Sea taxes the real sterling oil price is assured to rise by about a third between 1980 and 1990 (reflecting both a rise in the dollar price and a fail in the exchange rate). Even though some new fields are assumed to come on stream, production is assumed to be a little below its peak level, which is reached in mid-decade.

The projections

If scenario A were to be fulfilled, the projections suggest that tax receipts would rise by about 20 per cent in real terms. social services Expenditure on the National Health Service and personal social services needed to provide a given standard of service is determined mainly by demographic change (that is, changes in the total size and age structure of the population), by progress in medical science (including the development of new and better surgical procedures, methods of diagnosis and pharmaceutical products), and social trends affecting eg, the number of children in care.

As regards demography, total current expenditure on the hospital and community health services in England would rise by about 0.7 per cent a year during the 1980s, if current provision per head in each office main age groups remained constant. An equivalent figure expenditure on personal social services is 0.6 per cent in the number of men and women 75 and over between 1980 and 1990, compared with 2 per cent for the population as a

As for the cost of medical progress, the Department of Health and Social Security had estimated that an increase in current expenditure of about haif a per cent a year is required as a contribution to the costs of medical advance to finance inescapable innovations without enforcing offsetting reductions in standards else-

If current policies were broadly maintained, and with no improvements in levels of efficiency, the annual increase in provision necessary at least to meet the pressures exerted by demographic change and medi-cal advances might be of the order of between 1 and 1.5 per cent between 1982-83 and 1990-91.

There are however many areas of health care where there is a pressing need for more resources.

Expenditure would need to rise at between 2 and 3 per cent a year to make significant progress in all these areas. On the other hand the Government is committed to securing pro gressive increases in NHS

The scope for this is subject to review with health auth-orities. It seems doubtful (though not inconceivable) that cumulative improvement of 0.5 per cent a year could continue throughout the decade. The growth of the private sector may take a little of the pressure off NHS acute services. here could also be some small increases in income through

For these reasons it i suggested that the minimum net real growth in provision will be per cent a year after 1984-85, on scenario B. With a further 0.5 per cent a year efficiency savings, this would barely maintain present stan-

If gdp rises faster there will be strong pressures to use some of the extra wealth to improve standards; health service expen-diture normally rises as a percentage of gdp as gdp rises, because wealthier populations chose to spend more on health care, including care for the old and handicapped who depend on state services.

It is therefore suggested that the net real growth in provision might be at least 1.5 per cent a year after 1984-85 in scenario

Because of manning constraints in the mid-1970s, this is the first time in nearly a decade that the Foreign Office has had to trawl for talent outside its trainees recruited straight from university or school. Contrary to popular belief, the number of people in the Foreign Office has Thatcher began to bludgeon the Civil Service into submission.

A 10 per cent cut had to be made almost immediately in the manning of the 10 most populous overseas missions including Washington, New York, Paris and Bonn. The effect has been however to open gaps at the level of First Secretaries - the "workhorses" of the diplomatic service who fill a number of crucial political posts abroad.

After "treading a tightrope" for several years the Foreign Office found itself at the start of this year with 30 vacancies which somehow had to be filled. Most of the gaps have been plugged by promotions from within the service and the five "challenging appointments in international relations" are

Perhaps the most remarkable aspect of Amnesty's report, which called for an end to executions in Japan, is the lack of controversy it seems to have inspired. Amnesty volunteers in Tokyo report that since the announcement in London they have had 10 requests for copies of the original report, and otherwise little reaction.

Japanese law in fact has shrouded the use of capital punishment in secrecy since the nineteenth century when the basis for today's practice was set out. There are no public announcements of execution dates, relatives are notified after the fact, and official records are not released. Amnesty International says that in June, 28 prisoners were awaiting death. Between the end of the war and 1981, one private

There is no sign that Japan will seriously consider abolishing the death penalty. No political party in Japan has made an issue of it. In 1980, an opinion poll showed that only 14.3 per cent of those questioned wanted to keep it, a drop from sightly over 20 per cent five years earlier.

SPECTRUM

Street-smart plainness or curvaceous neo-classicism? Suzy Menkes reports from this week's Milan collections on conflicting themes proposed by the two biggest names of the Italian fashion industry

Stepping into the gender trap

The voluptous image of Italian fashion has been smashed underfoot. On Wednesday evening, Giorgio Armani's deliberately plain models, dressed in mannish jackets of brutal grey, strode out on the runway and stole the fashion show week.

The tender trap of seductive colour and gentle curves that used to be the style of Milan fashion has now become the gender trap. Armani's women are ensnared in collarless jackets, worn with wide straight pants, button-down shirts and even schoolboy ties. Shoes are flat. The rare skirts are long and plain, the make up minimal, and the effect so sexually uncertain that when a curve of the body showed through a fine linen shirt it came as a sudden

The overall image was witty, modern and absolutely in tune with street style. Armani was showing for the first time for two years and he received an ovation in the high tech theatre he has built in the bowels of his newly-acquired palazzo.

The collection is a challenge to Milan's other fashion colossus, Gianni Versace, who showed the same day a radically different style.

Armani had the man's jacket, cut long and fitted or wrapped like a cardigan with one lapel nonchalantly

Versace made the draped dress, curvaceous, feminine, inspired by the Greek and Roman classics. Versace had colour, deep navy and sea green, purple and red with bursts of sunshine vellow and not one single garment in Armani, in his own collection and in his line for Erreuno, used with brilliant effect the Japanese textures: graphcheck prints, a few stylized flowers and rough weaves of linen and jute.

Both depend on the Italian fabric industry which promotes the designer names and makes possible the lavish parties and luxury surroundings of the tashion industry.

In this city of contrasts that puts high tech seating into high Renaissance buildings, there is room for different designer styles. But it would be too casy to describe the fashion clash in Milan, played out to a lesser extent by other designers, as a battle between old and new. Armani's genius is the old fashioned art of tailoring.

The genius of Gianni Versace is to marry glamour and technology. His draped dresses, tucked and pleated suedes and slithers of striped silk wrapped across the back, were marvels of cutting. He then produced the same tricks in the aluminium mesh he has developed as the Eighties' answer to the sequin. The glittering, airy fabrics, now printed with flowers or studded with rhinestones, make his look the sexiest in Milan - a feminine and quintessentially Italian contrast to the Japanese styles.

Versace - like the rest of Milan shows a lot of trousers, but they are curved at the hips and narrow at the ankle, shown under slim three-quarter hips and in every possible fabric, tunics or loosely constructed tops. including sequin stude at night.

Blanket coverage for Lech

Next week is Lech Walesa Week!

Yes, Moreover salutes Lech Walesa, the darling of Stockholm, the man they call the Arthur Scargill of Poland, with a week-long festival of features dedicated to this brave man who has fought all his life for better conditions for shippard workers. These being no Nobel Prize for Shippard Struggies, the Nobel people have wisely decided to give him the Peace Prize instead. We applaud that derision!

Accordingly, we have commissioned articles from the greatest journalists of our time, sent out the finest photo-graphers and lined up the prettiest girls, in the best traditions of British newspapers, for an action-packed, get-up-and-go week of Polish pride.

On Day One, there will be an in-depth interview with the man himself, in which he will tell readers how he would have he will tell readers how he would have managed the Boycott Affair, what changes he would bring to The Sunday Times, and why Solidarity is called Solidarnosc in Poland, which, of course, is really called Polzka or something similar. He looks ahead, too, with frank thoughts on his chances of getting into the Labour Shadow Cabinet or of setting. the Labour Shadow Cabinet or of even one day becoming Pope.

On Day Two, we print an exclusive interview with Pat Phoenix, in which she talks frankly about "Lech and Me", and we go behind the scenes of Coronation. Street to see some of the stresses and strains that have led to her giving it all up. Will she go to Poland to join Lech? Will she go to Oslo to receive his Prize if he cannot leave Poland? All will be revealed. Also, "Why Poles Make Great Lovers", by our team of psychologists.

Day Three is Gdansk Day, when we take an intimate look at this ancient ship-building port and come across some surprising nooks and crannies that make surprising nooks and crannies that make this such a wonderfully unspoiled holiday place. Cafes, discos, bars, butcher's shops with meat in, secret supplies of petrol — we tell you everything you need to know for your Gday-out in Gdansk! Also, a brand-new competition in which you can win an ocean-going tanker made in Gdansk by members of Solidarity.

lighter note on Day Four, when we take a look at the Wonderful Wacky World of Walesa's Wit and Wisdom. How did this cheeky little chappie with the mountful moustache and rebellious twinkle come to be as much Poland's performer as Billy Connolly is for Glasgow or Alexei Sayle for somewhere in North London? What did he say to make the Pope laugh? What goes on at those Gdansk smoking concerts? And did you hear the one about General Jaruzelski and the French can-can dancer? All this, and more, in Thursday's tribute to Poland's own Finally, on Day Five, we finish an unforgettable week with a look behind the scenes at Lech Walesa, the homelover, the little-known Lech who loves horses, adores children and keeps a pack of savage fighting Polish mushrooms in., his back garden. We look at the books in his library, we picture the curtains in his sitting room, we tramp all over hisgarden trying to take pictures and were drive his neighbours frantic trying to get some juicy quotes out of them. This will be British journalism at its best.

By Day Six, of course, we will all be bored stiff with the subject and be wondering how on earth they can give a prize to someone called Wales with an "a" on the end, and what chance a man called Lech-Scotlanda would have. By Day Six, we'll have dropped Lech Walesa like a cold potato. But that's what British journa-lism is all about. So don't forget that, first, there'll be five glorious days of Walesa Week! # Plain Jane back-pack

Deborah Moggach meets Geraldine McEwan, optimist and portable actress

You can tell how long Getaldine McEwan has been at the National Theatre by a look at her dressing room. She has transformed this particular concrete cubicle into a second home. The walls are pinned with cards and posters, the table full of pot plants. One of these plants looks entirely dead but, as she says, you can always hope.

She is indeed an optimist, and with good reason. Fate has been kind to her, for at 16, when she was an unknown schoolgiri on her local Windsor stage, her acting talent was recognized. By the time she was 18 she was starring in her first West End success and being hailed as a

"pixie-faced comedienne". Now, at 51, she can look back on a stage and TV career which spans the Royal Shakespeare Company, the National Theatre, and commercial theatre and work with the best directors around. The only thing she's not done is to break through into films and become a big movie. star. But then who wants to wear dark glasses whenever they go shopping?

She's happy where she is. At the moment it's the National Theatre, where she is currently playing in The Rivals and You Can't Take It With You. And soon, touring the country, she's staging her own one-woman show, Two Inches of Ivory, based on the novels of Jane Austen.

Stepping out

After decades of working in the closed, hectic world of the theatre where, as she says "you're totally dependent on each other, and where so much is out of your control". stepping out alone into the fresh air, a theatrical rucksack on one's back.

With her one-woman show, she says, "I'm portable. I can take my Jane Austen show. My needs are simple - all I want is a stage." Most other artists, by neccessity, have to work alone - writing a book or painting a picture can be all too solitary an effort Actors, however, are only alone when they're out of work. Unless they take the initiative, and go back-packing.

The show's somewhat obsure title based on a letter Jane Amaien wrote to her nephew, describing "the little bit of ivory on which I work with so fine a brush". Austen's defined world suits itself particularly to the intimacy of a one-person

"No thunderstorms", says Miss McEwan. "No battles. Just those marvellous words. I've always loved Jane Austen. There's something so-personal about her. Have you noticed how people mention her as if she's their secret friend? That's her special quality. Lord David Cecil, her biographer, talks about her as if she's his close relative and he just left her house this morning. Like all charming people, she seems to be talking to you and you alone."

She worked out the evening's format with her director, Richard Digby Day. Deciding that Austen didn't need tricksness, they simply planned key extracts from each of the books. "One might not realize it, but Jane Austen is highly dramatic", says Miss McEwan. "Her irony is contained within the disloyane, and ntained within the dialogue, and dialogue makes up most of the books. This makes them wonderful to speak aloud. One must also remember that she wrote her books to be heard - in those days, people read to each other in the evenings. Her words are written for the voice.

"Her novels are full of life and suppressed strength. People don't always realize that. None of the television adaptations Tve seen have captured this. They've simply taken the stories at face value and treated them as domestic comedies of middle-class manners - precious, precise and niminy-piminy. They always look artificial."

Another pleasure is that her portable show has taken her out of the thestrical world she knows so well - unplugged her, so to speak, from the mains - and sent her into the world outside. She has been touring the show for the past 18 months, mounting it in provincial churches, schools and village halls. For the first time in her life she has been meeting ordinary people who never go to plays or who, if they do, have simply been seen as a blurred mass of faces beyond the footlights.

After all, she has worked in the theatre, non-stop, for 35 years. She is married within the profession - her husband is Hugh Cruttwell, head of RADA. Her friends are in the profession. And she lives in Barnes, a leafy, media gietto a murmur with voices learning their lines. "It's laughs. Ontside interests? "None. Oh dear, if only I were Michael Hordern I could talk about my

MEDICAL BRIEFING

An article by Dr Wainwright Evans of Cambridge in The Journal of the Royal College of Physicians heralds the return of the battle of bed-rest against early mobilization for patients who have a coronary thrombosis.

In the 1950s, patients who had endured a heart attack were given a six-week sentence of a regime known as strict bed-rest. They were not allowed up, even to wash, indeed, they had to lie as flat as their heart condition would allow, initially feeding by taking fluids through a straw. The 1960s winds of change blew this doctrine away and patients were advised to walk early and to return to full activity without undue delay.

Dr Wainwright Evans is suggest ing that the statistics on which the 1960s advice was based would not stand up to modern analysis, and that heart function and structure could not at that time be as thoroughly investigated as is necess-ary and is possible today. He suggests that until the results of more carefully monitored trials are available, it would be wise to recommend that patients should be in hospital for 21 days, with the first 14 days either in bed or sitting in a chair. A walk around the ward on the twelfth day would be allowed, but no strenuous activity for two or three months, by which time the scar in the heart muscle will be firmly contracted.

Even so, last week news that Propranolol (Inderal ICI) could act as a contraceptive by making sperms too sleepy to swim to the ovum, came as a surprise to doctors, and a worry to those male patients who still had hopes of fatherhood. Unfortunately, the original reports did not make it clear that Inderal has a contraceptive action when used intra-vaginally; when taken by mouth in normal doses it has no contraceptive action as the seminal levels are raised only by the usual therapeutic doses to a thousandth of the level needed to inhibit sperm mobility. Work done on this project in the world's great expert on the disease, died. His research work has enabled hundreds of thousands of children to mature normally, grow to their normal height and live with zest and

Archbishop problems he takes communion wafers (The Times Sept 24) drew attention to coeliac disease almost at the same time as Sir Wilfred Sheldon, the

Only within the past 40 years ha it been realized that the inability of patients to absorb fats and hence fat - soluble vitamins and calcium, was not because of a primary fat rance, but was secondary to changes in the lining of the small intestine induced by sensitivity to gluten, a protein found in wheat, rye, barley and oats. Removal of all gluten from the diet restores the structure of the intestine and produces a remission of the symp-toms of fatty diarrhoea, abdominal pain and swelling.

Children, their balanced diet restored, start to thrive again, adults are spared the languor induced by being chronically anaemic, short of vitamins and undernourished. Rice and maize flour can be substituted in the diet for that made from gluten-containing cereals,

The Vatican rule that a wafer without wheat gluten is not bread and therefore disallowed carries obvious problems for a priest.

The disease in a much milder form has been shown to be more common than had been thought and must now be considered as a possible diagnosis in all cases of recurrent intestinal upsets and mild anaemia, A report from Edinburgh (British Medical Journal, Jan 8) suggests that the increase in the numbers suffering from this disease is in fact apparent rather than real and due to improved methods of awareness of the condition.

TALKBACK

From Joanna Goyder, Manor House, Capel St Mary, Ipswich. Jacki Davis says that new women undergraduates joining Corpus Christi, Oxford, may be in for a "rude awakening". Though I accept that experiences differ even within a particular college, I would suggest that freshwomen arriving at Jesus, Cambridge, may be pleasantly surprised

Academically, a girl certainly has to be as good as her male counterpart if she is to win equal respect for her work - but she does not actually have to be better. No man has ever offered to let me read his essay, but I was once asked to lend mine to a fellow student. I am certain that he did not regard my work, the product of a female mind, as any more unreliable than that of any of his friends, male or female.

However, this is not to say that opportunities to be "submissive" and "sock-washing" do not abound if you wish to take advantage of them. In my first week I received a request from a contemporary to do his washing. I agreed at once - the only condition being that he did mine the following week! I did his washing, to the undisguised amusement of our friends, who thought it unlikely in the extreme that his side of the bargain would be kept. The next week, however, I left my dirty clothes with him and my trust proved well-founded, though even I was surprised by his offer to iron my shirts before returning them!

This cooperative arrangement continued happily throughout the year - and I should perhaps add that there was no ulterior motive present this was a relationship of convenience between neighbours. Prejudice is very often as much the responsibility of the women concerned as of the men, and an outrageous request like this is better met with an equally outrageous uggestion rather than with a raising of feminist backles.

Orly a SECOND-CLASS mind thinks

From Margaret Evans, Seven Kings High School, Itford, Essex I read with interest Jacki Davis's article on "Equality", in which she wrote about attitudes to women in mixed colleges at Oxford.

I am sorry that she was irritated by the young man whom she regarded as patronising when he invited a first year woman to read his essay "because it might be helpful". In such a hostile world, I hope that the woman did not spur his bouquet of intellectual flowers. May I suggest to women students in such situations that they could offer their own essays in return. They should have similar confidence that their work is worth reading. They might even assist a man in gaining a Zelig definitively places Woody Allen among the great creators of screen comedy. The character of Leonard Zelig which he embodies in his film is a logical extension of his roles in earlier films like Play it again, Sam and Annie Hall. Characteristically the older clowns - Linder and Chaplin, Keaton and Lloyd - were struggling, albeit mostly in vain, to live up to the economic and social expectations of respectable society, to win friends, fortune, love and respect. The typical Allen hero aspires to intellectual rather than economic status. A reader of magazines and advertisements, he strives to know the right books, see the right films, consult the right analysis, date the brightest girls and command the modish vocabulary and small talk for every occasion.

Leonard Zelig, who is supposed to have had his years of farne somewhere between the manic Twenties and the depressed Thirties, is the ultimate conformist. In the beginning he merely pretended to have read Moby Dick so that he would not be an outsider. Now though the urge to fit in and be liked has developed beyond psychosis. He has become the perfect human cha-meleon. With doctors or psychiatrists he becomes a doctor or a psychiatrist; put among fat men or Negroes or rabbis he turns obese or black or bearded before your very eyes. Having established this simple, outrageous comic premise, Allen (like Chaplin or Bunuel or any of the great inventors of comedy relentlessly follows through its logical developments. Leonard's disorder provokes a conflict in the people around him between those who want to exploit and those who want to cure what is, after all, only an extreme manifestation of conventional social behaviour.

The beauty of the joke is the form that Allen gives it. The entire film is presented, quite poker-faced, as a documentary reconstruction. Allen has often demonstrated his wide film culture and quick response to the tics of style. This is a perfect documentary biopic. An English voice intones the nicely-turned commentary, as fragments of old film, still photographs, the halting reminiscences of survivors and the glib commentary of contemporary pundits (real-life people like Susan Sontag, Saul Bellow and Dr Bruno Betteiheim) are as-

Not only is it perfect parody of the reportage film, with all its patent simplifications, half-truths and misinterpretations. The fragments of film within the film are wonderful comic pastiche. Here are the very tones of old newsreel titles and commentaries, and the way that people - politicians, celebrities or people on the street - behaved in front of silent cameras or early microphones. Especially piquant are extracts from an imagined Warner Brothers dramatized biography of 1935, with Zelig and his adventures glamorized Hollywood-

There is an awesome verisimilitude about Zelig which ought to create a permanent scepticism in the face of screen documents, Allen introduces a lot of genuine old footage and photographs, which by skilful cutting photographs, which by skillul cutting and dastardly doctoring are made to blend imperceptibly with the inventions. Thus Zelig plays golf with Bobby Jones and baseball with Red Grange, spars with Jack Dempsey, hobnobs with Eugene O'Neill and appears on the Paris music halls with Josephine Baker. (The great old entrepreneur Bricktop appears in person to recall the occasion.) He is serenaded by Fanny Brice and immortalized in prose by Scott Fitzgerald; and weekends at San Simeon with Randolph Hearst, Marion Davies and Charlie Chaplin. Cole Porter wants to write a song about him, but nothing rhymes with Zelig. It would be a shame to spoil the comic shock by describing his encounters with the Pope and Adolf Hitler. Accompanying Allen-Zelig through all these adventures, Mia Farrow, as his psychiatrist and salvation, displays the prime comic gift of never acknowledging by so much as a blink that anything they do is remotely comic.

The quality of great comedies, like Candide or Verdoux or Viridiana (and there is no embarrassment at all in putting Zelig in that sort of is that narratives of company) seemingly transparent simplicity leave you with quite as many questions about the condition of man

Seventy years ago Adolph Zukor started a company called "Famous Players in Famous Plays" and launched a long series of dignified and very boring films. The veteran producer Sam Spiegel revives the policy in Betrayal, with two ascendant stars. Ben Kingsley and Jeremy Irons, in the Harold Pinter play first seen at the Nethern

In his recent adapations from the stage (Come Back to the 5 & Dime, Jimmy Dean and Streamers) Robert Altman has shown that the camera eye and a cinematic management of space can add new dimensions to a theatre text. David Jones, the director of Betrayal, has no such ambitions; his camera is used as a self-effacing recorder. (Not selfeffacing enough in the event; the constant cross-cutting is obtrusively clumsy and ugly.)

Enjoyment then must depend upon responses to performances and text. The performances certainly are admirable: Kingsley with his oriental features and quicksilver changes of mood; Irons with a traditional English jeune premier style livened and made more expressive by a face that can crumple like a thwarted child's; Patricia Hodge, graceful and quietly witty; all three of them expert with the stylized Pinter repartee and pauses

The text is intriguing and amusing, of course, with its trick of tracing the course of an adulterous affair backwards to the point of its birth. The nine anti-chronological scenes of the stage version are retained almost unchanged in the film. The close view of the screen shows up its flimsiness. Pinter's seemingly tangential lines do, it is true, have a way of going to the depths of his people; but these colour-supplement adulterers (publisher, agent, gallery-owner – the middlemen of art) are after all fairly shallow.

Next Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday the National Film Theatre is showing these programmes origins there programmes is showing three programmes, orig-inally presented at the Edinburgh Film Festival, of the films of Ladislaw Starewicz, the Polish pioneer animator. Starewicz stands apart from any tradition of film or animation. He pursued a single-handed, artisan style of production, and in the Twenties firmly rejected Hollywood offers to set him up in a conventional studio. His films exist outside time. Hes masterpiece The Beetle's Deception or the Cameraman's Revenge was made in 1911, but it is subject to none of the technical limitations of the period and remains as rich as ever in its fun and fantasy. If Starewicz has any artistic antecedents they are rather Grand-ville or Carroll than any film artist. Born in Moscow in 1882, he was an films that he had the idea of using animated insect dolls. The Beetle's Deception is very close to Grandville a solemnly crazy tale about an adulterous beetle couple whose marital infidelities are recorded by a voyeur movie cameraman. When they go together to a cinema, and see each other's indiscretions on the screen, a fracas ensues, the cinema burns down and the two of them end up in gaol, still fighting.

After the Revolution Starewicz emigrated to France, where he worked up to his death in 1965. His best work dates from the Twenties and Thirties. His anthropomorphic animals and bizarre dolls are vividly characterized. His films could be impolite or horrific. A sweet little mascot pup pees insolently on a policeman's boots; the fish skeletons and other awful denizens of the dustbin come to life in a nightmare ballet. Love in Black and White has Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Tom Mix and a Negro couple in strange erotic connexions engineered by two Cupids, one black and one white. Though it is strange that the most famous film of his later years, the marvellous Zanzabelle a Paris (1947) is missing from the season, this is a welcome rediscovery of an artist not like any other.

All those about to enter hospital would have been well advised last night to watch The Old Men at the Zoo instead: one surgeon at St Clair's removes the wrong lung in the operating theatre, and a cancer victim is treated with the kind of bland "concern" which can only make matters worse. There is also an outbreak of food poisoning one look at the hospital kitchens and the patients would have called at once for general

Much of the play carried immediate conviction - the cancer victim grows more ill as he becomes more dependent, visibly shrinking as the doctor talks to him as a sergeant might talk to a recruit, and the sugges-tion that doctors are sometimes career prospects and reputations than they are for their patients is not at all unlikely. But, although the melodramatic aspects of the story were cleverly concealed beneath the realistic approach to medical care and nursing procedures, it was still almost too overwhelmingly hopeless a picture: George Gissing has been conflated with Your Life in Their Hands.

The writer, G. F. Newman, was clearly eager to emphasize the importance of "alternative medicine", but he seemed also to be making an even larger statement. Hospital dramas, whether of the heroic or bathetic kind, become symbols for something other than their ostensible theme - the title of this series itself suggests that Mr Newman is equally concerned to depict the callousness, the inefficiency and the sheer dilapidation of English society. There is nothing wrong with that, of course, but the weight of horror and of gloom is imposed with so much deliberation that there is a suspicion throughout of special pleading. The fact that "study guides" are being marketed with the series in order to stimulate "local debate and action" confirms this. What kind of "action" can a drama properly evoke, while at the same time retaining its claim to being more artful and imaginative than a documentary?

Sadler's Wells

Last week Buxton Festival Character in the productions of the medical productions of Vivaldi's Griselda barely has time to impose that, given a poor plot, a anything like a personal view on composer not manually a the proceedings. Pethans the dramatist in the theatrical same claustophobia affected the places and singers for sense, and the conventions of opera seria, baroque opera can be a farce. This week the English Bach Festival see sounds that emerged were often concentrating on Ramean's work, and in so doing they are solidly reinforcing the increasingly widely held view that here is a master who occupied the same sort of position in his age as Monteverdi did before him; or even, dare one say, Mozart after him.

This despite the fact that Wednesday night's tercentenary celebrations consisted only of extracts from two works, the opera pour la paix. Nais, and the opera-ballet Les Fêtes de Polymnie. And this despite also the fact that Ramean's basic building blocks are, like Vival-di's, pretty well-defined self-contained forms. Yet Ramean contained forms. Yet Ramean creates an underlying momentum by making his airs into flexible things, half aria, half recitative, and by exploiting his mastery of orchestral effect to the full: witness the arresting openings of both works.

After what by all accounts is a triumphant production of Platée these extracts are staged with hardly a prop. Partly because Terence Emery's cos-

La cenerentola Glyndebourne

With their five-town tour about to start, Glyndebourne Touring Opera are on home ground this week unveiling three of the operas in their repertory: Cenerentola, Fidelio and The Love for Three Oranges. I did not catch John Cox's original production in July and August, so I came to this version, prepared for the tour by Andy Hinds, fresh and uninfluenced by any memories.

This touring version works splendidly on its own terms and crackles along under the baton of James Judd. The sets, altered and reduced in size for smaller stages under the supervision of the original designer, Allen Charles Klein, are economical jet suggestive. Don Magnifico's drab castle, coloured in varying shades of brown, has a clever perspective backdrop making the stage area seem much larger than it is; at the same time the Other Place, Stratford his master plans to detect plague victims with a pair of plague victims w this matters little. What is missing is a positive character in the productions imdisciplined, especially in matters of dividem. And the old problem of poor standards of baroque oboe playing was again evident, especially in Nats.

In both works Richard Jackson sings the role of Jupiter confidently, though his light-ness of voice is perhaps a little ungodlike. In Nais. cut-out horse-drawn carriages cross backstage, return centre-stage slightly bigger and then come on again more or less life-size at the front with the characters crouching behind doing the steering. One of the carriages got stuck in the wing, but no doubt this will be ironed out in due course. Musically, too, there are good things, not least the playing of the Boumemouth Sinfonietta (which improved after a fairly lacklustre overture) and the chancy, controlled ensemble-singing from the principals.

In the title role Carolyn Watkinson, though never really moving comfortably, warms to her part as the evening gots on singing sympathetically and dealing with her final aria with thrilling command of articilation and tone. Her ugly sisters, Catherine Benson and Louise Winter, are marvellously tetchy and Philip O'Reilly as Du Magnifico, though not a fully rounded characterization, is lous. Gary Bennett is a mellow toned, romantic, if slightly bland Ramiro, but the focus of vocal attention is William Skimell as Dandini, a well thought-out, swaggering interpretation richly sung.

THE TIMES DIARY

Prime time

Unaccustomed as she was to running a war, the Prime Minister welcomed the wise advice offered to her during the Falklands campaign by one of her predecessors, Harold Macmillan.

Mrs Thatcher, whose political relationship with Macmillan is not intimate, is understood to have sought his views on several occasions as the crisis developed. This emerges from television sources after a rare interview which Macmillan, still sharp and sprightly despite the advance of his ninetieth birthday, recorded recently for BBC1 with Ludovic Kennedy.

The former prime minister, who First World War while serving with the Special Reserve Grenadier Guards, gave the interview for a programme which will celebrate the publication of a book from his own stable, Harold Macmillan - a Life in Pictures. The book, which includes many photographs from his own archives, will be published on October 27, when the programme

Though I understand the two prime ministers are fond of each other, this is believed not to have prevented Supermac from making acute comments about the Government on the programme.

Dock leaves

Author Charles Nicholl found himself with an unexpected final chapter to his book on Colombia when he returned home recently. An expert on Elizabethan literature, Nicholl had accepted the commission from Heinemann while waiting for proofs of his Thomas Nashe biography to come back from Routledge. He had not bargained for the Good Friday earthquake at Popayan which nearly killed him nor for his arrest on return by Customs officers for possession of a class A drug. The handful of dried cocoa leaves discovered on him, a ceremonial gift from the Arhuaco Indians, was sent via the Botanical Gardens at Kew to the government chemist for analysis.

Cocaine content was found to be nil but no one had thought to inform Uxbridge magistrates of the facts, and when Nicholl turned up this week armed with a humble letter of apology from the Commissioners of Customs he discovered they had set aside a whole day for the case. And because the clerk at the previous hearing had failed to note his not guilty plea, the anxious author was forced to enter the dock and plead again before the charge could be dismissed.

Michael Cocks, Labour's chief whip in the Commons since 1976. has reacted swiftly to reports that Neil Kinnock no longer requires his services. Cocks has told journalists that he has the unanimous support of all Labour MPs in the South-west.

Nervous laugh

Brian Richards, the British doctor accused in the United States of plotting to murder the head of his Harley Street practice, has a special brand of humour. Richards contributes to Video Doctor, a bi-monthly magazine taken by 4,000 GPs. This month's issue features a five-minute spot, mostly written by himself, on graffiti found in hospitals. Among the few printable items is: "Better a full bottle in front of me than a full frontal lobotomy", from the neurosuggery unit of an unnamed hospital.

In memoriam

Morbid memories of Labour's illfated campaign in the Bermondsey by-election were revived at the annual Tribune rally in Brighton yesterday. Peter Tatchell's election addresses were destroyed by the party earlier this year after it was discovered they had been printed by Militant's Cambridge Heath Press. Apparently only one copy survives. It was auctioned off for £36.50.

Le Nouveau, like Christmas, gets a little earlier each year. Under French Beaujolais Nouveau may not mtil

November 15, the date upon which all those silly races are held to get the first bottles of young wine on to British tables. The law, however, applies only to Beaujolais. This year Bargundy will be stealing some of Beaujolais' tonnerre by bringing out a nouvean on sale here from October 11, long before the annual shenanigans get under way. It is called Chaberlay Nouveau and is produced by Patriarche Per et Fils of Beaune, owners of the largest cellars in Burgundy. The house is playing both ends against the middle because it also handles Beaujolais Nouveau.

Poland's prize predicament

Warsaw Lech Walesa in self-defence: "Stop talking about my millions . . I want to say, I have one suit; no, two, one still from my wedding. Four pairs of socks and two that need darning". The new Nobel Peace laureate is not one of the world's best dressed men. Every age moulds its heroes and the Polish workers of 1980 required their leader to be modest, God-fearing, spontaneous, a bit ragged at the edges; a man who could speak truths, be impudent to the political bosses and wear clothes that did not quite fit his stumpy frame.

As he sits in his living room under a large gaudy portrait of the Pope, it is clear that the maelstrom of Polish politics has not made him into a smooth-tongued statesman: the grammar slips, the moustache trembles, ash drops on the carpet.

The Nobel Prize has given Mr Walesa a choice: he can play a waiting game, waiting for worker discontent to build up again, for the pendulum of Polish life to swing his way again. The Nobel Prize means that he will not be forgotten, will blunt the deluge of government propaganda against him. Or he can capitalize on the prize by becoming more active in the worker oppo-sition to General Jaruzelski's poli-cies. It seems unlikely (though still not impossible) that the authorities would arrest the former Solidarity chief if he met now with the leaders of the underground resistance. Life is embarrassing enough for the leadership without jailing a Nobel Peace Prize winner. First indications - Mr Walesa's donation of the prize money to the church fund for private farmers -

Roger Boyes on the wider political the wider political award not only to the Polish Workers but also to the Polish Government. Had Mr Walesa rejected such offers award of the Nobel Peace Prize to Lech Walesa are that the electrician will choose the waiting option, will cement his links with the Roman Catholic Church which has always counselled patience. Even with the prestige of the prize, the possibilities are not large, the scope for action restrained by the limits of Poland's economic crisis, the intransigence of the Government, vigilance of Poland's neighbours. The real effect of the prize is to strike at the legitimacy of govern-ment policies towards Mr Walesa and, by extension, the Solidarity movement. The prize shows that the Government, a team of competent crisis managers and quite shrewd tacticians, has not boxed clever. It decided at too early a stage to exclude Mr Walesa from the national equation. When the authorities released Mr Walesa in November 1982, after 11 months of internment, they trumpeted loudly that Mr Walesa was the former leader of a former union, a individual representing nobody. Therefore no dialogue could be held with him. But over the past year, Mr Walesa's obrusive presence has proved a constant reproach to General Jaruzelski's Government, which claims that it is basing its policies on a real consensus and a constant dialogue with workers.

The solution offered by the collective brainpower within the Government has been a propaganda campaign that has repeatedly tried to discredit Mr Walesa in the eyes of his fellow workers. The logic behind this: if the workers reject Mr Walesa. then the fact that we are not talking to Mr Walesa cannot be held against

The Government always had a choice too: it could have tried to institutionalize Mr Walesa. By offering him a rule - not within the new pro-government unions, which the former Solidarity leader could never have accepted - the authorities could have shown themselves ready to acknowledge Mr Walesa's standing among Polish workers. Had the Government tried to shape some form of conciliation council with the co-operation of the Church, and then given Mr Walesa a chance to participate, it would have muffled his presence and at the same time harnessed his myth. The Nobel Peace Prize would thus have been an repeatedly, the Government could then have portrayed the Solidarity leader as a man of the past. As things stand, he is still a man of the undeclared future.

A warning signal must surely have been received by the Government when Pope John Paul II insisted on meeting Mr Walesa in June. (It is this meeting above all that allowed the Norwegian Nobel Committee to award the prize without running the. risk of being accused of playing in the Polish political game.) This showed the continuing significance of Mr Walesa, even if that significance lies in a discreet "backseat" role for the Solidarity chief. Because of a failure of political imagination, Mr Walesa has not been institutionalized but expelled

Poland now faces the frankly absurd situation of a Nobel Peace laureate commuting to work every day as a maintenance electrician in the Lenin shipyards. This is not the Soviet Union: Walesa is not Andrei Sakharov, who can simply be exiled to a provincial city. Mr Walesa still has the respect of many workers, he has been given an explicitly public role by the Nobel committee, and the workers themselves have enough grievances against the Government for the whole mixture to be quite volatile. Oslo has helped to produce a strong and strange brew in Central Europe.

Bernard Levin: The way we live now

Reader's guide to groupuscules

When the Militant Tendency held a Walpurgistag at the Wembley Conference Centre the other day, the proceedings were enlivened (no bad thing, I imagine) by a gentleman from the International Spartacist League who attempted to move a motion congratulating the Soviet Union on shooting down the Korean airliner. No doubt to his astonishment as well as chagrin, such a view was held to be a little too militant even for the Tendentious Ones themselves (or possibly they were conscious of the fact that, as the Mayor of Bournemouth once said no less implausibly when welcoming the annual conference of the TUC to his city, "The eyes and ears of the world are upon us"), and he was promptly arraigned on a charge of

But the episode set me thinking, once again, about that extraordinary quality of the far left - it is, indeed its most remarkable characteristic the relentless and apparently inevi-table tendency of all revolutionary groups to split into mutually antagonistic fragments, each of which then splits into further fragments, which in turn split into yet more ... "And these have smaller fleas to bite 'em, And so proceed ad infinitum".

The revolutionary right has a similar tendency, but it is not so marked because there is much less of the extreme right to start with: there was, though, a jolly fellow called Arnold Leese, a great expert on the diseases of camels, who complained that Oswald Mosley and his lot were insufficiently anti-semitic (his appetite for anti-semitism must have been exceptionally hearty), set up in business with a policy of exterminating all the Jews in Britain, and called attention to his differences with Mosley by fastening upon him the magnificent title of "the kosher

The fissiparousness of the far left provides, or certainly should pro-vide, great comfort for the rest of us; I am one of those who have small relish for being thrown into a dungeon, and even less for being hanged from a lamp-post, and when contemplate the likelihood of my experiencing such fates I can always cheer myself up by thinking that the enemy will be too busy murdering one another to bother with me. Now, however, I no longer have to do the contemplating unaided, for a pamphlet that provides a comprehensive guide to all the groupuscules of the left has just been published, and I can warmly recommend it as a bedside book at the highest level, rivalling the Guide Michelin or even Professor Schoenbaum's Shakes peare's Lives.

This catalogue raisonné of les déraisonnables is called Tracts Beyond The Times. It is compiled and annotated by Charles Eiwell and is one of the Research Reports of the Social Affairs Unit, a body which shelters under the hospitable wing of the Institute of Economic Affairs (that fact alone guarantees that its work will be thorough and scholarly and will annoy a lot of people who deserve to be annoyed), from whom it may presumably be obtained.

Tracts beyond The Times is, strictly speaking, a guide not to the groupuscules themselves but to their publications; its sub-title is "A brief Guide to the Communist or Revolutionary Marxist Press". But most of the organizations are explained or defined, and a picture of them can be fully built up, ex pede Herculem, upon the details of their newspapers and magazines. And from those details, I assure you, there is much quiet joy to be had.

I flattered myself that the infinite sub-divisions of the left were fairly familiar to me: I erred. Just listen to this for a start, from the pamphlet's Introduction; it ought to be set to music, preferably by Berlioz:

the Communist Party, the New Communist Party, the Militant Tendency, the Socialist Organiser Alliance, the Workers' Socialist League, the Socialist Workers' Party, the International Marxist Group, the Workers' Revolutionary Party, the Workers' Revolutionary Party, the Chartist Collective, the Workers' Power Group, the Revolutionary Communist Party, the International Communist Current (that might be a misprint for Currant, particularly since most of these people are plainly as nutly as a fruit-cakel, Big Flame, the Black Unity and Freedom Party, the Revolutionary Communist the Revolutionary Communist Group, the Spartacist League, the Workers' Party, the Revolutionary Communist League of Great Britain, the Revolutionary Communist Party of Britain and the Communist Party of Britain (Marxist-Leninist).

As you may suppose, none of the members of any of these organizations would willingly share a coffin, let alone a taxi, with any of their rivals, and wonderful to behold is the mutual anathematizing that goes On among them:

The Spartacist League calls itself Trotskyist but defends the Soviet Union . . . However this does not prevent it from denouncing the "Moscow-loyal Straight Left" or the "vicarious Third World cheerleaders of the RCG - formerly a pseudo-Trotskyist group". The Lesgue is equally contemptuous of CND and the "fakecontemptuous of CND and the "hater Party, Socialist Workers' Party and International Marxist Group, whose nims are quite compatible with Mgr Bruce Kent". [I could hardly have put it better myself.]

Well, the Spartacist League certainly has rigorous standards of exclusiveness, though not quite so rigorous as those of the Workers' Party, which appears to have only one member, who is presumably always unanimous; the party (or "he", as it is no doubt called for short) is "both Trotskvist and pro-USSR and claims be the only truly Communist Party in Britain".

But that is a claim made by virtually every one of these bodies and regularly repeated in their journals. And if the pleasure of murmuring the names of the organizations is great, greater still is that of rolling round the tongue the names of their papers:

... Revolutionary Socialism, Chile Fights, The Worker, Communist Focus, Link, Critique, World Revolrocus, Link, Critique, World Revolution, The Leninist. Proletarian, Class Struggle, The Next Step, Class Fighter, Spartacist Britain, Troops Out. Workers Power [whose publishers presumably think that apostrophes are bourgeois, or even response republicanary] Yours Society counter-revolutionary], Young Socialist, Black Voice, Revolution Youth and Tribune. [Whatever became of Mr John Silkin's attempt to prise loose the bold of the Bennites on Tribune? Come to that, whatever became of Mr Silkin?]

It hardly needs emphasizing that no ordinary person, and few extraordinary ones, could tell the difference between any one of these groups and any other, nor understand the doctrinal differences by which they may be distinguished, let alone find intelligible the mutual detestation felt for each other by organizations which seem to hold absolutely identical views. Certainly Mr Elwell, who must have read, in the course of producing this report, more columninches of gibberish than any other man alive or dead, wisely makes no attempt to classify the rival ideologies beyond what is necessary to establish the identity of the organi-He is thorough, none the less; he even lists the firms who specialize in typesetting or printing the papers, journals have the same press day and their staffs meet at the works cannot imagine - the printers' insurance premium must be ruinous. Mr Elwell also goes into the finances of the groups and their publications, and discusses, without conclusively resolving, the difficult question of nomenclature; the old view, that to call a man a communist meant that he was a member or adherent of the CP, is clearly no longer adequate, yet no other word or phrase will really do -Markist, Trotskyist (which would anyway rule out most of the Moscow-oriented groups), extremist, left (which now has to be sub-divided into "soft left", "hard left", "traditional left", "broad left" and many another left). Tracts Beyond The Times is a valuable guide to an almost impossibly fragmented subject it will have to be revised and up-dated regularly if it is not to lose its usefulness, because the publications it deals with, and for that matter the organizations which publish them, tend, even when they are not splitting for ideological reasons, to go out of existence fairly frequently, sometimes resurfacing later with new name. Besides, those who rea the pamphlet for pleasure alone should not be deprived of further editions with new forms of delight as these become available. Meanwhile, the guillotine grows rusty, and that rumbling of wheels denotes the arrival of the coalman, not the tumbrils.

Brazil suffers, but is it enough?

The wave of looting at supermarkets and food shops that began in Rio de Janeiro and spread to São Paulo, is petering out after more than 200 incidents. The Rio state governor, Leonel Brizola, has now said that soup kitchens will be set up for the growing number of destitutes in Rio. At the last count, there were 7,000 beggars in the city centre. But the Brazil's wave of social disturbances continues to grow. Apart from an average of five armed bank robberies almost every week-day, 250 graves were robbed in São Paulo last month and Molotov cocktails were thrown at the US consulate. Four hundred unemployed are now camped out in São Paulo's main park, under the windows of the State Assembly, making the Governor, Franco Montoro, regret having said that thousands of jobs would be created in the wake of last April's riots.

Not all of this, can be blamed directly on the belt-tightening measures taken to meet the demands of the IMF and Brazil's 2,000 creditor banks. But the intensifying recession of the past three years - its first stage an attempt to ward off the drastic recipes of the find itself, the PHS present, more acute phase, trying actually to fulfil them - has certainly been in response to outside press-

Industry will produce 7 per cent less this year than last, on top of a 10 per cent fall in the previous two years. One in five factory workers have now been sacked in the big cities, and this could reach one in three by the end of next year. Giving the number of unemployed, perhaps three million, is almost meaningless, there being no unemployment benefit in Brazil More to the point that 900,000 people are now gathering waste paper, collecting scrap, sifting rubbish, or hawking things in the street, in the six largest cities alone.

The building industry, first step on the ladder for the hundreds of thousands who flood to the cities each year, is at half capacity, and still shrinking, Some 48,000 building workers have been laid off in Rio so far this year, 65,000 in São Paulo.

The five-year drought which has been intensifying in the nine states of the north-east cannot be blamed on the IMP either. That its effects have become so dramatic, however, is partly the result of recent priorities aimed at integrating Brazil fully into the world economic community. This was to be done through increasing trade, and by investing in the vast dollar-thirsty projects, so appealing to bankers, which are largely responsible for the huge debt. Social problems were expected to be automatically solved by a "filter down" process, which has not come about.

The IMF insists that subsidies for food, which undoubtedly boost inflation but also help to keep food prices down, should be eliminated. Partly as a result, food purchases are down by an average of 5 per cent, and by a third in some poor areas. Yet only a third of Brazilians have. an adequate diet as it is, and 45 per cent of potential recruits called up by the armed forces have to be rejected for some physical deficiency, generally caused by malnu-

The deteriorating situation in the north-east, putting tremendous pressure on precarious facilities, has beloed cause infant mortality rates to soar, and in Ceara State a quarter of all babies now die before they reach their first birthday.

Brazil has finally reached its second agreement with the IMF after months of agonizing nego-tiations. If the economy shrinks by about 5 per cent this year (a figure magnified by the 2.7 per cent annual rise in population) things will be far tougher next. If inflation is cut by two thirds, public spending will be further squeezed.

One side effect of producing larger trading surpluses - the only way by which the snowballing of the debt can be slowed, let alone reduced means that a larger proportion of the now continually shrinking cake has to be exported. Governments in many countries reportedly consider that Brazil should be taught a lesson for the economic errors which have brought it to its present straits. But there is also a body of opinion which considers that there is no realistic prospect of a return to the sustained economic growth, which would be the solution to Third World debt

So the heroic sacrifices now being made by Brazil will not improve a situation which depends on an upturn in trade to succeed. Those responsible for the economic errors are not those now being called on to suffer for them through starvation. higher infant mortality, a higher and more bizarre crime rate, and roaming the streets trying to turn an honest penny. It is excellent raw material for a real revolution. Do the hankers want that?

The dangers of a Churchill posture

outburst against the Soviet Union in Washington last week has attracted enough criticism to keep her happy for weeks. I say "happy" because she has got the goat of hierais all right, and I suspect there is nothing she likes better expensions of them. likes better, especially if they are in her own party.

If she read Mr George Walden's attack on the speech on this page earlier this week, for instance, she will probably have been torn between emotions of outrage ("What could you expect from a man who came straight out of that awful Foreign Office on to the Tory benches in June?") and pure joy ("Well, that got to them, then").

There is no doubt, all the same, that most Conservative professionals think she made a serious political error in domestic terms, whatever the merits or demerits of the speech in the purely inter-national context. Public opinion in this country is not "soft on communism" and they admire the Prime Minister's spirit and determination; but they are becoming genuinely frightened about East-West relations and want to know what the Government is doing to prevent "a drift to war". Mrs Thatcher's reply in Washington appeared to be "Nothing because there is nothing to be done" - except carry a big stick and shout selfcongratulatory slogans to keep our courage up. The negativeness of this approach does not measure up to the seriousness of the issue, and however the Prime Minister may have sounded to American ears she sounded shrill to many British ones.

All this prompts the question - how did she get into this pickle? Part of the answer is, of course, embedded deeply in Mrs Thatcher's political style. A tendency to tip over from resolution to shrillness is one that even her greatest admirers near even her political Achilles' heel. But though she is sometimes impulsive, she seldom throws political calculation entirely to the winds. And in this case a number of the rational judgments either im-plicit in the speech or now attributed to her by her supporters, are worth looking at with an open mind.

The first of these is the desire to reassure the Reagan administration. I have often written here that this is a perfectly respectable aim. We depend on the US for nuclear protection and if the fashionable trend in Establishment circles here is continued, we shall be even more dependent than we are already. By this I mean that if we are to reduce our dependence on battlefield and intermediate-range nuclear weapons in Europe, this will not just mean increasing our conventional forces at great expense, it will also entail our increased dependence on the willingness of the US President to risk annihilation on behalf of Europe by pushing the button of his strategic weapons if the Russians used nuclear weapons in Europe first.

In the circumstances, it certainly behoves European politicians to indicate to US governments and Congress that we are on the same side as they are and are prepared to bear a fair share of the burdens. It may even be in the interests of Britain to be more supportive than other European countries in this

But that should not, and need not involve parroting whatever the current Administration line may be. For one thing, it is unnecessary. Harold Macmillan, for example, was and was known to be the most pro-American of prime mutaters but he took care to distinguish his views from those of Fisenhower or Kennedy and to exploit a nice British line in wise, slightly world weary detachment much appreciated on both sides of the Atlantic.

Moreover it does not do justice to the fact that we are not in the same relation to the Soviet Union as the US. We lack the resources to accept the global responsibility of comming "Soviet expansion", even when we agree that "containment" is appropriate. We have regional interests in Europe which give us a different perspective from America;—as Mrs Thatcher herself acknowledged when she sided with Europe mater than the US in the gas pipeline affair.

Of course, it is tempting to imply 150 per cent agreement with the President, especially when you are telling him that British troops will leave Belize a lot carlier than he would like, but the danger is that nnrealistic expectations are aroused by these means both in the US and in Britain and the subsequent sense of betrayal may be all the worse

There is no point wasting time on the second calculation Mrs Thanker is suposed to have made: that tought alking by the British Prime Minister will have some practical effect on Soviet behaviour. It is so absurd that I do not believe that the Prime Minister really entertains it berself But what about the supposed effect on the British public? Will not this rallying call stiffen our backbones and make us less susceptible to the blandishments of neutralist propa-ganda? Isn't this what Churchill, in whose honour Mrs Thatcher spoke,

Here, it seems to me is the real flaw in the Prime Minister's attitude to these matters. She sees herself in the wrong heroic context. The wretched analogy with the 1930s and the appearement of Hitler has in varying contexts misled generation after generation of politicians on both sides of the Atlantic, It was the undoing of Anthony Eden in relation to Nasser, it seduced John Kennedy and inred Lyndon Johnson to destruction, it obsesses Casper Weinberger and Rouald Reagan, and now it apparently affects Margaret Thatcher's wits as well.

The differences between the situation in the 1930s and now are legion but two are sufficient to dispose of the question:

We, unlike the British public opinion to which Churchill was appealing, have long since accepted the nature of the threat. We have willingly paid a high economic price for our freedom for the last 34 years and according to the opinion polls are prepared to go on paying it. Mrs. Thatcher may think we should pay even more, but I doubt whether easy vituperation against the Soviet Union will affect the argument about Fortress Falklands, which is where the defence expenditure shoe: really pinches.

Churchill had no responsibility in the 1930s. He was free to say what he liked and did so with the more zusto because he believed, righth that war was inevitable, anyway by 1936. Mrs Thatcher is Prime Minister of Britain, part of a strong military alliance with a solid publi opinion behind her. She has no need of posturings and nor do we. War is not inevitable because we have deterred it. What we need now, perhaps, as Churchill might have said, is more iaw-jaw.

Time is not on our side, Lady Copper

Well, I can see it is good fun. But and forget about the others? Or find reviewing books is not really work, is it? Not what I call proper work?"

"Up to a point, Lady Copper. But novels intellingently and wittily in at least there are some pretty paradoxes about the game of reviewing."

1. The Waste Paper Paradox. You may suppose that the literary critic spends all day in an armchair with his or her nose buried in the latest good book. Wrong. The publishing industry, which has the most powerful publicity machine of any after the travel and possibly the property industries, vomits out so many circulars, puffs, "personal letters" beginning "Dear Philip, I make it a practice never to write to literary editors, but in this particular instance . . . take in stock lit ed letter no 3, Miss Smith," and assorted waste paper, that you get time to read a real book only in bed or the bathroom. And they try to telephone you there, also.

2. The hissing serpent paradox. The famous reviews that linger in the memory are the stinkers. Can you remember any review by Dorothy Parker other than ones in which she is heaving the old harpoon into the uivering flesh of the author? "This is not a novel to be tossed aside lightly: it should be thrown with great force." This paradox suggests something not entirely agreeable about human nature and journalism, taking pleasure in the disasters of others. What on earth is the point of using your very limited space for book reviews on doing a dance of derision on bad books, when you could be recommending good books? The answer, Lady Copper, is that a page of fulsome honey and flowers is unreadable and unread. What we want is constructive criticism, which sometimes seems as paradoxical as a taste for pheasant combined with disapproval of blood sports.

3. The numbers paradox. The review of one book is usually better criticism and better journalism than a review of several books together. So what do you do at a time of year like this when there are more than 20 novels being published every Patrick Knight | 20 novels oming published every week? Select one for a proper review 800 words? Perhaps we should give more space to fiction. OK, Lady Copper, provided that we accept the corollary that there will be less space for seminal, innovative, creative (and all the other Lit Crit hurs) words) books of politics, biography. poetry, and history, not forgetting "newsy" topical books that catch the eye of the news desk and stimulate the Press Association into pouring out paperfalls of "news" eviscerate from the book.

4. The critical paradox. Are we in business to provide a reader service. listing as many books as possible? To write serious criticism, which will affect perceptions of the book and the world? To write lively journalism that will keep the attention of the little old lady in Hastings; attention which is being competed for by two cats? As the old Times proconsul said, tearing up Claude Cockburn's first dispatch from Washington and dropping it in the waste-paper-basket. "On this the waste-paper-basket: occasion, Cockburn, the cats win." The answer, Lady Copper, is we have to try to do all three things, and several lesser ones. 5. The perfectionist paradox To write a proper review of an important book, which the author may have spent a life-time writing. is a serious, rather an awesome business. One could spend a week, 3 month, three months, on doing justice. Such time is not available in the hurly-burly and the little disturbances of daily journalism. There comes a time, about 7.30pm on a Tuesday, when you must stop rewriting and polishing, and deliver though they are not perfect. Perfection is not available on this side of the heavenly book room. One definition of journalism is making the best of a paradoxical job in a hurry. . There are plenty more paradoxes, Lady Copper. But I see a verdigris look coming into your eyes. I think might go and try to read a good

A PATRIOT FOR LABOUR

About the great questions of no sense for Mr Kinnock to enough. Yet emotionally, essential for victory. The enemy without could not be defeated by of the Labour Party, Mrs groups and warring factions within the party, and the defeat of the enemy was what mattered. There must be no activity in the Labour Party that is superior to that purpose," The diagnosis was indisputable, but how is unity to be achieved convincingly, and with honour, in a party so divided as Labour is on essentials? Are principles to be swallowed for unity's sake, and if so, whose?

That question was, understandably, not even touched on Mr Kinnock preferred to dwell on what unites the party which was sensible enough, tactically. Nothing could have been gained by trying yesterday afternoon to produce even the hint of an answer to the nuclear arms question that had so divided the conference the day before that it had again voted two ways at once. By common consent (Mr James Callaghan and Dr Gavin Strang potwithstanding) the Conference had determined to let sleeping dogs lie for the time his first speech to the Labour to be dealt with in substance and Conference since his election as not simply by empty comproleader. His theme was unity. mise In the meantime, however, "Coherent, persistent unity" was Mr Kinnock could safely con-Thatcher's alleged attack on the welfare state.

The Conservatives would be foolish to ignore the stimulus that this could provide for Labour unity at a time when their own problems with welfare spending are becoming more difficult. Under a leader who can articulate their case as well as Mr Kinnock did yesterday, Labour could be inspired by it to relegate their other differences, particularly if the public's approval of Mrs Thatcher seemed to be declining. The Government would, however, be still more mistaken to underestimate the attraction of what Mr Kinnock has to say on this subject to a wider public. How, he de-manded, could it be said that we could not afford welfare when the Government's policies drive down the investment and output which could pay for welfare?

The fallacy of an argument which ignores the damage done to competitive production by eroding money values as a result It would therefore have made Government should be clear principle and policy which divide his party, Mr Neil Kinnock had nothing to say in his first speech to the and when Mr Kinnock says that welfare economies are made by ministers who do not understand the needs of "real" people he wields a potentially powerful weapon. By calling into aid Churchill, who "gloried" in participating in the foundation of the welfare state, and compar-ing this with Mrs Thatcher's alleged attempt to terminate it, Mr Kinnock asserted that the Government's approach is mean-minded and Labour's is the true patriotism.

> Yesterday he called on people outside Labour's ranks, who had never voted for it, to help defend the health service, and he spoke of the patriotism of democratic socialism, interpreted as the patriotism of peace, justice and care. It is Mr Kinnock's gift to be able to express his socialism in terms of noble aspiration rather than mean resentment, which makes him more effective than Mr Foot. The questions he has not answered are the ones that matter. But the Government is not explaining itself very well, and yesterday Mr Kinnock showed a new determination to divert attention from Labour's problems by focusing on those that embarrass Mrs Thatcher. This could provide a breathing space within which what is still the principal opposition party might get its act together.

THE PARKINSON AFFAIR

Parkinson has made it so. He could have stood pat on the principle that his private life was not the concern of others beyond his family and friends. That would have been a perfectly respectable position and should have commanded respect. He did not. By making a statement in the early hours of yesterday morning he put his private life about its detail.

This is unfortunate for a number of reasons. It is unfortunate for his family and for Miss It was a balance of judgment. No Keays's family. They have all doubt Mr Parkinson had to been unnecessarily hurt beyond the distress which they would anyway have felt about the episode. That is always the sad fallout of people in public life, whose private behaviour then becomes public property, too. It is unfortunate because it has inevitably put the Prime Minister and her colleagues on the defensive, over a matter which should be of no concern to the government. It is unfortunate because it has given the public an opportunity for one of its periodic fits of false morality and hypocrisy. With luck, that op-portunity will not be taken.

Was it necessary for Mr Parkinson to reveal these details about his private life? Only he can say, but if necessary, has he now done the right thing by staying at his post? One consequence of making this episode the subject of a public announcement is that it becomes legitimate to pass judgment on his behaviour as a whole.

it is undeniable that it would have been politically more unstable state of society's atti-convenient for the Prime Min-tude to sexuality. We all know

It is only legitimate to discuss ster if Mr Parkinson had re-only too well that, whatever the Parkinson affair because Mr signed as a result of this society's aspirations to the connation reluctantly. The Prime Minister is a hard political taskmaster but she is a loyal friend, particularly to fellow-politicians in personal trouble. In this case her loyalty is assisted by the fact that the episode has in no way impaired Mr Parkinson's ability to carry out his function as Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

> And yet the episode leaves a bad taste in the mouth. It is not that Mr Parkinson's career prospects of very high office must now be blighted, though they are. Nor is it the invidious juxtaposition of his personal difficulties with his previous role as Chairman of the Conservative Party, which in its ethos and traditions has always articulated the merits of family life. It is not even the curious wording of Mr Parkinson's statement which hints that an offer of marriage to Miss Keays was made, only to be withdrawn...

The aftertaste comes from the announcement. She would no trary, life in this land is full of doubt have accepted his resig-split homes, illegitimacy, and one-parent families. Why then his party might then have felt does the public expect its leaders that though the reputation of the to preserve the outward forms of Government had been dented a morality which it no longer somewhat by the episode, it had practises, if it ever did? In been more than atoned for by examining this instability, we must begin by overcoming any a promising member of the sense of our own virtues for fear Prime Minister's team who after of falling into vice on the other

> There seems to be a doubt wickler om CXISTING mora concepts and the legal framework founded on them gives society adequate guidance about sex. There was a reaction against a too repressive morality. That led to a point where sexuality seemed to break through into every conceivable field where it does not belong. Yet a direct and spontaneous expression of sexuality is a natural occurrence and, as such, never ugly. It is only moral repression that seeks to make sexuality on the one hand dirty and hypocritical, or, in the reaction to that, shameless and blatant. The struggle here and the sense of uncertainty is caused by society's fear of allowing its natural instincts to develop, thereby causing some slackening in its sense of morality.

There will be the usual cant about "security". That is just an excuse for prurience in this case as in most others concerning the marital infidelities of politicians. They have been a more or less constant feature of the British political scene for as long as there have been Cabinets. Mr. Parkinson has made a sad and silly blunder. His political career will suffer; his personal life has obviously suffered more. The real victims, for whom no sympathy is enough, are Mrs. Parkinson and Miss Keays.

DECOMPRESSION PAINS

The transition from military to civilian rule, from dictatorship. to democracy, is rarely smooth at the best of times. In Argentina, it is not the best of times. Accelerating inflation forced the union leadership to concede demands for a general strike on Tuesday, a strike that was overwhelmingly successful in turn-out but which in current economic circumstances can bring no lasting gains. A Patagonian judge has arrested a Central Bank governor, jeopardising critical negotiations of the country's foreign debt. The different branches of the armed services take different semipublic stands on this question, as on so many others. The Rattenbach report on the conduct of the Falklands War hangs over some heads, the question of responsibility for the post-1976 repression over many more. President Bignone admits to "encountering serious difficulties", and some sources close to the military even hint that he may not last out the short weeks that remain before the elections on October 30.

Argentina has strong institutions and a weak constitution. The armed forces, the political parties, the unions - even the courts - have alternated in the ascendancy. At one time soldiers have behaved as if judges did not exist, and at another, a judge behaves as if he could stop an army - or at least a central bank with a junta behind it. The disastrous policies of the last Peronist governments can only be explained by their knowledge that their span would be brief, and that it was therefore rational to make hay while the sun shone. Despite the restrictions on their activities imposed after 1976, the unions show no loss of strength, and the chiefs must follow the rank and file for fear of being swept aside. If, as we sincerely hope, elections take place at the end of this month, the vote will be high and the contest between Peronists and Radicals a closer one than in the recent past.

We have a particular interest in this process, not just the general one of welcoming another return to democracy in Latin America, where that battered concept refuses to admit defeat. The differences between Great Britain and Argentina will not, of course, disappear with the return of an elected government, but new voices will be heard and Hospital cuts to assess the weight of what they say, we will have to become more familiar with what was before last year a distant spectacle that did not much affect us. No Argentine politician will wish to go too far or too fast in restoring relations with this country, but among the Peronists as well as among the Radicals, there are figures who afford some hope for at least beginning to find ways out of the current blind impasse. We should therefore wish President Bignone luck for the remainder of his term and hope that nothing interrupts the scheduled elections. Elections are not a certain cure for Argentine ills, but there is no other possible remedy, and no other course can free the Prometheus of the pampas from the twin torments of civilian irresponsibility and military excess.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Distant prospect of council savings

Sir, How very fortunate that on the day when you published the letter from the Leader of Seston district council (September 27) you produced a major leading article referring to common sense. The words used in your article and the thought behind them do more than enough to counter-balance what was said by the councillor.

Why doesn't Councillor Watson

state in precise and not general terms where the "considerable savings" are going to come in terms of staffing? Services are going to be passed to the districts. The fire service is one of them. This county council, with the objective of rationalising its service and saving moneys, proposed to close (and ultimately did close) a major fire station in the area. Which district council was the only one to object? Councillor Watson's Sefton.

Way to win the ideological war

From Mr G. Alan Thompson Sir, Mrs Thatcher is right to remind us all of the global ideological struggle for the hearts and minds of men, the outcome of which is likely to determine our firture.

A large part of the globe is controlled already by some form of Marxist government or military dictatorship. Many people in the Third World dislike equally the organised materialism of the East and the selfish materialism of the West, but are led to believe the former is more likely to bring about the changes they feel are needed.

Many in the West who would never join a Marxist party fail to understand the war of ideas, and assist the spread of Marxism by the way they live.

The ideological struggle will only be won when we have a superior ideology. It is not enough to talk about freedom, which is often used for purely selfish ends. A militant amoral ideology which denies the existence of God can only be overcome by an ideology based on an unshakable commitment to search for and follow the will of God, living in the light of his absolute standards of honesty, purity, unselfishness and love.

There is clear evidence that people in different walks of life in many countries who have accepted the need for change in their own lives have found new attitudes and motives. This has led them to take constructive action which has profoundly affected the life of whole communities and sometimes of nations. Marxists who have seen that human nature can be changed have accepted this new thinking and living.

The best hope for peace in our perilous world lies neither in unilateral or multilateral disarmament but in moral and spiritual nearmament.

Yours faithfully. G. ALAN THOMPSON, 45 Butterfield Road, Wheathampstead, St Albans, Hertfordshire. October 3. .

From Dr M. Bialoguski Sir, Mrs Thatcher has drawn an analogy between the Soviet Union and pre-war Germany. The analogy was apt except for one important aspect. The Nazi regime in Germany had overwhelming support from her people. The Soviet government has not. The Russians have allowed themselves to be trapped in a secret police system of such pervasiveness and ingenuity that there is no way in which they can rid themselves of it. And I firmly believe that, given a chance, they would.

It is both unwise and unfair, therefore, to equate them with the Nazis. On the contrary, great care should be taken to differentiate between the Soviet regime and the peoples it enslaves. Yours faithfully,

MICHAEL BIALOGUSKI, Poynings, Waterhouse Lane, Kingswood, Surrey.

Hygiene in prisons

From Dr P. A. Trafford Sir. The Prison Medical Association welcomes the action of the Prison Governors' Association in bringing to public notice the standards of hygiene now prevailing in some penal establishments. Prison medical officers have repeatedly drawn attention to this state of affairs in their periodical hygiene reports, but little or no action has resulted.

Members of my association now hope to see some positive steps to reduce overcrowding in prisons and to improve toilet facilities, bathing arrangements, clothing exchanges,

P. A. TRAFFORD, Chairman, Prison Medical Association, Cambridge Road, Bristol. September 30.

Envoy recalled

From the Ambassador of Nicaragua Sir, May I refer to the report in The Times of September 30 under the heading, "Envoy recalled".

The Spanish Government has decided to change its Ambassador to Nicaragua. The decision to do this was taken some months ago. Contrary to your report, relations between Nicaragua and Spain are normal and very friendly.

The ETA incident in Central America is being used by the right in Spain against the Prime Minister and his Government. Yours faithfully.

FRANCISCO D'ESCOTO. Ambassador, Nicaraguan Embassy, 8 Gloucester Road, SW7.

From Mr Nigel H. Harris Sir. It is plainly sensible for organisations employing large numbers of staff to review at intervals their cost-effectiveness. In the case of hospitals, it would be negligent in the extreme if the health authorities did not regularly decide if the patients (not the staff) were receiving the highest standard of care within the limits of the available taxpayers' money.

There is little doubt that health authorities would not make the effort to obtain value for money unless they were provoked by Government policies, whilst private hospitals have no choice but to be cost-effective, or to go out of Public debate should concentrate on which staff can be removed without affecting the care of patients. It is tragic that the Department of Health has asked for staff cuts in hospitals across the not apply to the general practitioner board. I have asked before, and it is necessary to ask again, why there has been no request to produce savings in administration at the Department of Health? Why is the general practitioner service to be absolved from making savings? It is the latter, not the hospital service, which is responsible for the overspending and is the main reason for the present exercise. Surely the first priority for staff cuts must be in administration - nonmedical, medical and nursing.

A target has been set for hospital staff, so why not a similar one for central and regional administration? More than £450m is spent on central administration and I would have thought it would be no hardship to reduce this by £50m.

More than £1,000m per annum is spent by the general practitioners on drugs and again I would have thought it would not be difficult to reduce this by at least £50m. Is it not therefore disgraceful that hospitals have strict cash limits, but this does isolationism.

Sir, Mr Michael Ivens, the Director of Aims of Industry, in his article of September 28, overlooks important legal provisions regarding the payment of the political levy and also justifies what is a travesty of Before a trade union is allowed by law to engage in political activity there has to be a ballot of its members on the establishment of political objects with payments being made from a separate political fund. Before that takes effect, rules for the political fund must be drawn up and approved by the certification officer. Payments in respect of political activities may be made only from the political fund of the trade

So there are already tight legal controls on a union's political activity. But these relate solely to the establishment of a political fund. After following these legal constraints a union may decide to affiliate to a political party - up to now such affiliation has been to the Labour Party.

A Yorkshire plea

From Mr Herbert Butler Sir. If a Yorkshireman (Mr Bryson. September 30) is concerned about "Humberside" you can imagine what a Lancastrian feels about "Merseyside" and "Greater "Merseyside" Manchester".

Buckhurst Hill,

October 1.

From Mr D. B. Walters Sir. "Try to draft an unbarrable entail" used to be a standard land law problem. You cannot do it. It would indeed be unfortunate if, in rejecting heritage (a perfectly good law term in Scots and French for landed property and its associ-ated rights), another technical legal expression were to be adopted, the outstanding characteristic of which is the ease with which it can be barred (broken) by the least family-minded of those who become entitled to it.

Yours etc. D. B. WALTERS, Cambridge Street, October 1.

It is clear that £100m could be saved from these two sources, and no patient would suffer as a result. By all means reduce over-manning of the hospital ancillary service; in large part this has aiready been achieved. It is utter madness to ask district hospital authorities to reduce by an arbitrary figure the numbers of doctors, nurses, radiographers, physiotherapists, occupational therapists, speech therapists, pharmacists, medical sec-retaries when the departments in which they work are often underestablished District health authorities are now engaged in an Alice in Wonderland exercise to reduce staffing numbers by an arbitrary figure. It is inevitable that the result of their deliberations will be a reduction in service 10 patients in some parts of the country. However, it is most unlikely that the emergency services will be affected.

Yours faithfully, NIGEL H. HARRIS. 72 Harley Street, WI.

Catholic doubt on From the Chief Executive of us as professional officers. The only Merseyside County Council stipulation would be that that teacher training

From the Bishop of Hexham and Sir, Sir Keith Joseph's decision (The Times, October 4) to end teacher training in De La Salle College of Education at Middleton, Manchester, raises at least two vital questions for the Roman Catholic community.

The first is whether we still have firm governmental support in providing Catholic teachers for Catholic schools. The Education Secretary's decision has reduced our proportion of national teacher training from the historic share of 9.3 per cent to an actual share of 8.5 per cent. Moreover, it has also reduced the North-west, with 34 per cent of our Catholic schools, to only 20 per cent of our Catholic teachertraining places. The North as a whole will have 50 per cent of our Catholic schools, but only 39 per cent of our Catholic teacher-training

Sir Keith has listed the changing circumstances which have led him to disregard our historic share. He does not say what, in future, will be the basis for deciding how many of our colleges will remain in business. Until he has agreed a new and firm basis for teacher-training allocation with our national representatives the future of Catholic teacher training will not be secure.

This raises the second important question of whether our national representatives will be adequately consulted before future decisions are taken. Initially, there was no adequate previous consultation about De La Salle College. After serious representations from the Catholic Bishops' Conference and the Governors, the original closure decision was reviewed.

The department has clearly considered all the points made from the very beginning before making this present final decision to close. However, in my view, the Secretary of State's freedom of choice was considerably restricted because the decisions about the future of all the other colleges had already been taken, and the new Chancellor of the Exchequer had announced further financial cuts.

Until we can be sure that our national representatives will always be consulted by the Department of Education and Science before future decisions are taken about teacher training our colleges will not have a sufficiently secure basis for their future work.

Yours sincerely THUGH LINDSAY, Bishop's House, East Denton Hall, 800 West Road, Newcastle upon Tyne. October 4.

Portmeirion hotel

From Professor Gerald Dix Sir, On September 27 you reported

Cars effer it by fire it has been decided to rebuild the hotel at Portmeirion, where Noel Coward wrote his play Blythe Spirit

This statement is rather misleading. The hotel at Portmeirion, which has continued in operation in a modified way since the fire of June, 1981, consisted of a central building and a number of cottages. It was in one of those cottages, the Watch House, that Coward wrote Blithe Spirit, between one Saturday and the next. That cottage, like all the others, was undamaged and quite unaffected by the fire.

The former main building was badly damaged by the fire and has since suffered from the weather, but it was by no means "destroyed" and has for some time been re-roofed and protected from the elements. It will be good to see it in use again, as a constituent part of the village that was Sir Clough Williams-Ellis's main concern.

Yours truly, GERALD DIX. University of Liverpool. Department of Civic Design, Abercromby Square, Liverpool. September 29.

Cenotaph ceremony

From Captain Eric Lowden Sir, Some years ago I had the privilege of laying a wreath on behalf of the Merchant Air Service. One of these very senior, very distinguished, officers was heard to comment,to no one in particular: Funny how the people who did the actual fighting are left to the last." i suspect that Mr Peter Fletcher's letter (October 3) will arouse a sympathetic response amongst many ex-servicemen of all ranks - even the most senior.

It was made for Sir John Lequesne, a successful London grocer, and found its way into the great collection of eighteenth century art formed by Anna Thomson Dodge, the automobile millionairess. It was sold at Christie's in London in 1971 for £24,000. Yesterday it was bought by Koopman the London dealer, in partnership with Museumpiece of Zurich. They are believed to have been buying for a Middle Eastern client who lives in England.

The 10 most important pieces in the New York sale went to purchasers from outside the United States, including four more purchases by Koop-man, two by a Middle East collector and one each by two different Canadian collectors. The sale totalled £1,096,537 with 14 per cent unsold.

How computers keep North Sea oil flowing

Oil production which began strata. So the site is covered seven weeks ago from the huge Magnus oilfield in the North Sea has demonstrated an important new technique for the extraction of hydrocarbons from difficult sites.

The method is the latest levelopment in microprocessor technology and involves the installation of micropro-cessors on the seabed to regulate the flow of oil and gas. Furthermore, this innova-tion is an extension of a microelectronic control system developed for military aircraft Such as the Tornado.

Although the Magnus field contains about half as much oil as more than a dozen of the largest oilfields put together, British Petroleum needed an elaborate scheme to recover the hydrocarbons from an immense but elongated and irregular-shaped oil-bearing

By Pearce Wright, Science Editor with a network of "satellite" borehole, and oil is flowing from five of the seven satellites which are up to seven kilo-metres from the platform. The trick has been to devise a microcomputer system which can be attached to the wellhead on the seabed with-out the need for a diver. That device has to provide reliable two-way communications with the control room on the platform and yet allow the unit to be replaced easily if maintenance is needed. The similarity between the advanced systems devised for military aircraft and the demands of satellite oil well production is in the need for very high reliability. The difference is that an additional factor in aircraft is to cut the weight of equipment.

The weight is reduced by using just two wires as a "data highway" to carry complicated signals between a large pack-age of instruments and control apparatus and a central computer controller. An iden-tical pair of wires connects the microprocessor at each satel-lite wellhead with the one at the monitoring and control room on the platform.

The cleverness rests in the link. The one at the wellhead converts information about the opening and closing of the valve, the pressure in the well and other characteristics of the hydrocarbon stream into a series of coded messages. All that data can be delivered in an orderly stream by a pair of thin wires and deciphered at the platform, and instructions returned to adjust the valves on the wollhead. The electronics system has been developed by a team from Marconi Avionics and is the first application of equipment that has been designed to provide automatic control at depths of up to 8,000ft of water. Their equipment is designed as part of an electronic-hydraulic control unit which is attached to weilhead.

The electronic part with its microprocessor is lowered by crane to plug into the wellhead almost as simply as pushing a jack into a telephone socket. The wellhead electronics are mounted in a cannister designed to meet specifications set by Lloyd's for pressure vessels, enabling conventional electronic components to be osed and operated in a dry gas at atmospheric pressure.

Tender offer by the Company to purchase approximately 15 per cent. of its Ordinary shares at a price between 150p and 200p per share Company ("off-market") or through The Stock Exchange ("on-market") will open today, Friday 7th October. 1983 and close at 3.30 p.m. on Friday. 21st October, 1983. The terms of the tender offer and the action that shareholders should take if they wish to tender some or all of their shares are set out below.

(i) Shareholders are invited to tender at a price within the range of a minimum of 1500 per share and a maximum of 2000 per share inclusive.

(ii) The maximum number of shares for which the Company will accept tenders in 924,807 (approximately 15 per cent. of the present issued Ordinary share capital). Shareholders will be able to tender all or some of their shares, but if more than 924.807 shares are tendered, tenders may be scaled down. balloted or rejected as explained in paragraph (iv) below.

(iii) If tenders representing less than I per cent of the voting rights attached to the Company's Ordinary shares (being 61,248 Ordinary shares) are received the tender offer will be void.

(iv) If the number of shares tendered for sale is more than 924,807, the striking price (being the price that the Company will pay) will be the lowest price at which the number of shares sought (i.e. 924,807) is met and all shareholders who tender at or below the striking price will receive that price (subject to the provisions of paragraph (x) below). If necessary, tenders made at the striking price will be scaled down pro rata or balloted. No tenders at above the striking

(v) If the number of shares tendered for sale is less than 924,807, tendering shareholders will receive the maximum price of 200p per share.

(vi) All tenders lodged by shareholders or by their agents will be irrevocable. (viii) It will be open to shareholders to tender a proportion of their shares

(viii) The tender offer will open on 7th October, 1983, and will close at 3.30 p.m. on 21st October, 1983. The on-market tender will be conducted by The Stock Exchange and the off-market tender will be conducted by a representative of the Company. Upon closing, dealings in the Company's shares will be temporarily suspended, the results of both tenders will be amalgamated and a common striking price will be determined by The Stock Exchange and the representative of the Company by reference to both on- and off-market tenders. The decisions of The Stock Exchange and the Company's representative as to the striking price and as to which shares have been successfully tendered shall be conclusive and binding on all shareholders whether they have

(ix) At 9.30 a.m. on the first business day following the determination by The Stock Exchange and the representative of the Company as to which shares have been successfully tendered at or below the striking price, dealings in the Company's shares will resume and sales will be effected through The Stock Exchange of those shares which have been successfully tendered on-market. It is emphasised that the terms of such on-market sales may in no circumstances be subsequently varied: nor will such sales or the settlement thereof be conditional on the approval of off-market ourchase contracts. (x) Sales resulting from successful on-market tenders will be for normal Stock Exchange Account Settlement on 7th November, 1983, being the settlement day for the Account ending on 28th October, 1983. Shareholders who have successfully tendered on-market will therefore receive their proceeds of sale (less normal dealing expenses) through their stockbroker or other agent in the usual way once they have provided a valid share certificate and signed the appropriate transfer form. # Marketing and advertising: Torin Douglas reports on a rare promotional drive

For a business that sells other people's goods to the public, independent Television has been strangely reluctant to sell its own goods - its programmes - in a similiar fashion. Few ITV companies have advertised their forthcoming productions and even on-air promotions advertising by another name have been less polished than those of the BBC.

Now all that is changing. The companies were stung more than they will admit by the drop in audiences a year ago. This autumn ITV has launched its biggest promotional effort yet and already it seems to have the desired effect. Total viewing hours in the first three weeks of the autumn schedule are up and the gains have been made almost entirely by ITV, as the Independent Television Companies Association has been quick to point out,

Mr David Shaw, the association's general secretary, says: "The average viewer has wat-ched ITV for over two hours more than in the same period in

"With our share of the also remaining buoyant at 56 per cent, these are trends we'll be hoping to maintain in the period to: Christmas." The arrival of Channel 4 has certainly played a part. Even the weather may have had an effect. But the figures are hard to ignore.

Spearheading the American epic The Winds of War, which must have a strong claim to be the most heavily promoted TV programme of all time: on-air promotions ran regularly from mid-summer, culminating in five-minute trailers that were billed in TV

In addition, the two London ITV contractors ran advertising campaigns for the series. Thames using radio and news-papers and London Weekend using radio and posters.

IIV's promotional zeal does not end there, however. This week sees the start of a film advertising campaign by Channel 4 which will run for the next six months, using adver-tisements designed to make people read the programme istings. Next week sees the launch by Television South of a new concept in TV promotion, the TVS Viewers' Club, offering discounts on a variety of goods and services as well as a chance to have a say in programming.

The ITCA is in the process of ITV and will be choosing three programmes to advertise this autumo Meanwhile Thames and London Weekend will continue with their own advertising campaigns, as will some other IIV companies.

Mr Ron Miller, sales director of London Weekend and chairman of the ITCA's promotions sub-committee, "A programme is a product and it has to be sold. Td like to think that our ratings success this autumn has been due to a mixture of strong programming and promotion the best programme in the world won't work unless it's up its own promotional efforts. In addition to the controversial poster campaign, it has been running for two years (one poster showed Mrs Thatcher spanking the Archbishop of Canterbury, another Denis Thatcher in an apron, while last week there were complaints from Arsenal Football Club about a poster saying "Arsenal fans - now you can watch live football this weekend"), the station is running radio commercials and press advertisements for its programmes and Research by Channel 4 and its advertising agency, Boase Massimi Pollitt, has shown that one of the channel's problems is that people do not read the programme listings to find what is on: the new campaign, which started this week in The Times and other papers, is designed to put that right. The first adver-tisement shows an elegant pair of legs and the headline reads "Was it only Dr Marvil's degree that got her the job at St Clair's? Find out at 9.30." The reader has to run his eye down the programme listings, printed in the advertisement, to find out that the programme in question is The Nation's Health.

The TVS Viewers' Club, has different aim, namely, to encourage viewers to feel closer the station. Mr Martin kson, TVS Controller of public affairs, says: "Television has not felt the need to do this before, but such clubs are part and parcel of the promotional activity of radio stations and "Membership will be free and hope to get 20,000 members ristmas and 30,000 by March. Members will receive a club card which will give them discounts on holidays, wine, luggage, restaurants, insurance and other goods. They will get a chance to win the book of our series The Spice of Life and to visit the studios and watch programmes being made, as well as taking part in pro-gramme research."

TVS is investing £70,000 in the venture, using professional direct response agency, MSW Rapp & Collins, but the aim is for it to make a profit. The benefit to the company, apart from the potential profit, are that it will build up an affinity with its audience, it will provide a regular panel for programme research and that it will give maximum impact to TVS's new this year and we believe we afternoon programming.

> The most clear-cut case history on the value of promotion is that of the first London Weekend blockbuster Christie Didn't They Ask Evans? three years ago.

In London, where the programme was very heavily trailed on the air and advertised on radio, it topped the ratings. In eight other ITV areas, it did not make even the top ten.

That was a one-off programme, which did not have a chance to build an audience,

The secretive Barclays prepare for Ellerman

rick Barclay, now set to take over the Ellerman Lines shipping and breweries empire, have a quiet presence even in the hotel trade which they entered some 20 years ago. With the Ellerman deal still to be finalized on November 15 they are adopting a low profile, shunning public exposure of their company's affairs and business philosophy.

At the offices of their main company, Barclays Hotels, at 2 Hyde Park Place, overlooking the north side of Hyde Park, nquirers get short, if polite. Barclays Hotels and its network of subsidiaries last reported as a group on the year to December 1980. Turnover s £3.33m – down from 1979's £4.17m and 1978's £5.27m with the group's pretax losses standing at £713,246. There had been an accumulated loss at the beginning of 1980 of £1.1m. But in 1980 the group nevertheriess finished up with a bottom-line profit of about £490,000 because of extraordinary items contributing £1.18m. During the year a hotel sale netted £4,4m.

The company's auditors, Cooper and Lybrand, qualified the accounts because they were not satisfied money due from related companies would be recovered in full. Coopers qualified the 1979 accounts for he same reason.

It was during 1979 the Barclays acquired the Mirabeau, luxury hotel in Monte Carlo which they still operate. In 1980 the brothers sold the Londonderry Hotel in London's Old Park Lane, reportedly to Arab

The 1979 accounts show pretax group loss of £196,400. The year before pretax profits had stood at £142,000, an 83 per cent drop on the 1977 level £846,000.

The group's loans exposure at the end of 1980 was not great at marginally above £1m. But this had varied over the year as was to be expected in an essentially property dealing business such

At the end of 1975 loans had totalled £5.8m, had become repayable and the Barclays were contemplating significant dis-posals to reduce debts.

Up to 1980 the Barclays had been involved with a number of other London hotels, among them Hyde Park North (sold in 1971) and the Senator (sold in mid-seventies). The Cado-

The notable survivor is the Howard Hotel, the Barclays' flagship in Britain. It is one of London's plushier hotels just off the Thames Embankment near the Aldwych. It opened in 1975. The brothers, remembered in the hotel world as at one time in estate agency and then property development in the London area, have until now had two main thrusts in their business. For as well as buying, operating and sometimes selling hotels they also launched into catering. They spearheaded this drive by

The offer document in consequence did not tell the world very much about the affairs of Barclays Hotels.

North, already in losses, had started to sell off some hotels. But Barclays took on nine, four of them in the London area and four on the south coast, with another in Surrey.

A number have been sold off.
One of those remaining is the Oatlands Park hotel at Weybridge and there is known to be one more at Worthing.

Early this year the brothers were on the move again. The Euromoney Syndication Guide reported that M. F. North had arranged a £23m financing deal for seven years through the First National Bank of Boston. By the end of February, successfully – to the tune of around £17m – for three of the British Transport Hotels which had been put up for sale by British Rail.

Barclays Hotels in 1979 had some £6m in net tangible assests, including £5.6m in fixed assets. One measure of the challenge the Barclays are facing in taking over loss-making Ellerman is that Ellerman's net tangible assets stand at around £250m, half of them accounted for by fixed assets.

The particular challenge is Ellerman's shipping interests, which last year made a £3.1m loss. Ellerman was also in losses in its travel and leisure division but this is not part of the Barclays deal, an ironical turn of events because that division would have seemed a much more logical extension of the Barciays' interests.

Ellerman's brewing business which is part of the Barclays deal is notably profitable. There is Tollemache & Cobbold, the East Anglia regional brewers. and J.W. Cameron which trades mainly in the north-east of England. The breweries, with tied pubs, could clearly fit in with the Barclays' drive into the catering and leisure areas.

The question is what the Barclays can make of the Ellerman shipping interests even though others before them notably a construction-based Trafalgar House with Cunard - have shown it is a path which can be trod with some success.

. The Barclays have made clear they will continue with the cludes the operation of 16 ships.

On this aspect a Barclays spokesman - predictably anonymous - said: "It is simply a business. There is cold storage in South Africa. There is freight forwarding in East Africa. It is not purely a shipping com-

The Barclays are so far silent on whether their thrust into the eisure sector might on the shipping side take them into the operation of cruise liners.

What the secretive brothers will make of Ellerman remains far from clear. But they have survived in the difficult world of property. Their public shyness, according to one executive with them for a time, veils qualities that include straightforward dealing with individuals and an accessibility within on persistent buying. Earlier this week one broker arranged a "put through" of 3 million shares (1 per cent of the company) and dealers said that a similar amount had been nicked up by one appropriate.

a similar amount had been picked up by one aggressive ouver yesterday.

GKN also enjoyed a return to favour after Birmingham-based broker Albert E. Sharp arranged a seminar for the group. The shares responded with a jump to 169p before closing at 164p—a rise on the day of 4p.

Gilts spent a quiet day, but managed to hold on to earlier gains of around 25p, while on the foreign exchange the pound rose 0.6 cents to $1.4925.

Shares of Crest Nicholson, the housing to leisure group, appear to be running ahead of events. Yesterday they closed 4p dearer at 91p ahead of a meeting with brokers Laing & Cruickshank later today.

Insurance broker Stewart: Wrightson, the subject of several bullish borkers' circulars recently, held talks with borkers Grieverson Grant on Wednesday. The meeting appears to have confirmed Grieveson's earlier findings that the group has get to grips with its problems and its probably now due for a reviting. The shares rose Tp to 253p. rose 7p to 253p.

THE TIMES FRIDAY OCTOBER 7 1983 GOLF: THE THROWBACK THAT LIFTED A BRITON BUT LOWERED THE FLAG AT WENTWORTH

Faldo rides high on the back of a baboon

Nick Faldo kept the British flag flying in the Suntory match-play championship at Wentworth yesterday but it is a tattered and disgraced Union Jack that flutters from the club flagpole. Faldo had the benefit of an appalling piece of dishonesty on the part of some baboon in the crowd, compounded by a small cheer that arose when his unlucky opponent, Graham Marsh, missed a second putt from three fect or so. Playing squared the match at the 15th, Faldo pulled his tee-shot at the next and th touch of book he needed to get the ball on line for the flag added further impetus and it scuttled through the green. After a pause of three or four seconds the bail reappeared, two or three feet in the air. having obviously been tossed back on to the green.

Faldo was able to get a four with a second putt from four feet - which might well have come about anyway, by the way of a chip and putt - whereupon Marsh took three more. Can it be a pure coincidence that this was the only time throughout the match that Marsh needed more than two puts? Neither of the players, it should be said in fairness to Faldo, nor the referee, Bill McCrea, were able to see what happened.

British sportsmanship, or rather the lack of it, has come in for severe criticism lately, particularly on the part of Raymond Floyd, the American Ryder Cup player. One has never been too sure of the validity of his various complaints but there could be no complaints. could be no possible doubt yesterday.

Had the hooligans moved in on this game that prides itself on its integrity of behaviour? Gentleman that he is, Marsh gave Faldo a congratulatory pat on the back when Faldo got down with a chip and a putt after hitting a superb three wood through the long 17th (571 yards) for a winning birdle four. Marsh had taken three to reach the green and missed from perhaps 15 feet. Thus Faldo takes his place in the second round, to be played over 36 holes today.

According to the rules of golf, Faldo's ball would have to be dropped where it lay, had it come to rest. A moving ball would have to be played where it lay - on the green in this case. Mr McCrea could, under the rule of equity, have insisted on a drop, but had been advised by an official on the spot that there was no indication that the ball had been thrown back.

How could an official have placed such an extraordinary interpretation on the incident, as distinct from those in the crowded gallery (to say nothing of countless millions under the eye of television), many of whom were incensed by the referee's ruling? One declared: "I am British and proud of it but as far as I am concerned I hope Faldo three-putts." After the match many spectators ran to Marsh's car to express their disgust at the treatment he had received.

Another gentleman of golf, Langer, was the player of the day, disregarding Ballesteros's blinding finish against Palmer. Rock-solid through the green, Langer put to flight his detractors when he wielded his putter, whichever grip he used. He had only 12 putts in the first nine holes, saving his par twice with single putts and winning four other holes. four other holes.

There was little that a dispirited Weiskopf could do about it but one would have wished for a less supine recognition of impending defeat. Driving against a tree stump at the 13th he immediately conceded, though an official had declared before Wieskopf's arrival that he might be rabbit scrape. He might have tried to hack the ball back to the fairway. He could have played another off the tee and hoped that he could match a five by Langer, too far left of the fairway for a sight of the flag, with a three with his second ball. A balf in three at the next seemed to come as a welcome relief for the United States.

Lyle was destroyed by his putter, particularly at three successive holes from the sixth. He missed a tiddler after Norman had holed across the green to lose the sixth and took five at the next three holes, again by way of a wobbly putter. Lyle got one back but Norman put him to rest with a four iron to 12 feet at the Player, finishing with two birdie fours, still could not hold off a determined Charles, who matched Player's four at the 17th and hit a three-wood to six feet for an eagle at the last. The other Australian, Graham, had a torrid time going out with two ugly sixes. Still, he was only two down but a five at the 16th sealed of the 34-hole WPGA event at Caldy yesterday.

Elizabeth Glass, who comes from Zimbabwe and can be seen putting right-handed one minute and left-handed the next, pulled up with a 70. Michelle Walker, the former English and British women's champion, returned a 71, and Susan Affana and Christine Sharp were Moon and Christine Sharp were each responsible for a 72.

Miss Glass, whose father played golf for Rhodesia, was involved in college golf in the United States before joining the WPGA circuit in June. She has already notched a second place finish on the tour, but reckoned that the 14 pars and four birdies she had yesterday added up to her most satisfying round to date.

Miss Walker put in a lot of good work on and around the greens, but what made her 71 was an eagle at the 386 yards 16th, where she caught the green with a four-iron and holed from 18ft.

Mrs Sharp's 72 had a much happier ending than Miss Moon's. Where the Essex girl holed from 12ft to close with a birdie, the Canadian nissed a little putt on each of the last two greens.

Pots and plans go well for Charlton

By Sydney Friskin

Eddie Charlton, of Australia, who eventually taken by Charlton, who led 4-0 at the interval, beat Willie Thorne 5-0 yesterday to qualify for the semi-final round of the international tournament sponsored by Jameson Whiskey at Newcastle. The match was over in three hours. Thorne conceding the fifth frame and the match with four reds left. Thorne was the same player who had beaten Rsy Reardon 5-0 in the second round. Chariton held the reins all the way, although the match at no time resembled a race.

Faires said yesterday: "People can read into this what they like. What I can may is that the only way Kent Invicta will fold is if the Rugby League folds."

I'm Thompson, chairman of Maidstone United PC, on whose ground Invicta play, and a director of the rugby club, said: "We are now in the process of restructuring the board in order to strengthen our position and ensure the future of Rugby League in the area." Invicta are obviously hoping that the infusion of new strength at boardroom level will provide new capital.

championship, which starts tomor-row, is strictly limited as a competitive structure for first-class rugby. As a stepping stone for players seeking representative honours this season it has been overtaken by events, England having chosen their squad for the games against Canada and New Zerland Zealand

By Gerald Davies
Whatever else may be said of coaching, the widespread acceptance of principles of play and understanding of techniques has led to a uniformity of approach. One side will play much like any other, with very few exceptions. But by their very nature and coastitution, the Japanese make an exception, and their players must inevitably supply a different emphasis. They did so on their first visit to Wales, but though they were extertaining coough not It is inconceivable that the selectors will depart to any marked extent from their squad, when they consider England's side for the international championship – unless outside events, like the threatened professional tournament, force them to do so. They must be hoping for a cond performance seniors New for a good performance against New Zealand on November 19, by which time there remain only the semi-final and final rounds of the county championship. It is to be hoped that they were entertaining enough not much success came their way.

It is 10 years since that first visit, when they lost the international match by 62 points to 14; 11 tries were screed with Phil Bennett scoring two, kicking nine conversions. When Wales returned the compliment and visited Japan in 1975, they scored 138 points against 18 in two internationals.

It will be interesting to learn in the course of their current five match championship, it is to be hoped that one good performance in a championship game does not unduly outweigh consistency of form shown in senior club games.

Most of those senior clubs have been building up relationships with Welsh clubs over the years, conscious of Welsh standards. For several of them the championshin is It will be interesting to learn in the course of their current five match tour of Wales, whether they have made any significant strides forward. Typically, they are intensely analytical about the game. What they give away in stature, they make up for in efficiency: in the scrammage, where they will be shorter and lighter than their opponents, they will have mastered the mechanics. several of them the championship is several of them the championship is going to bring embarrassment, both for players and club officials. Take Harliquins for example, who play Gloucester tomorrow and Cardiff on October 22, the first two weekends of the championship, Middlesex and Surrey will claim their quota of Harliquins but, since Gloucestershire will do the same for their local club, this weekend's game though levelled in practical terms though levelled in practical terms will have lost its meaning.

Though they cannot master the lineout to the same extent, they can rely on variety, speed and accuracy. Elsewhere they rely on mobility and speed, playing at such pace that they leave the impression that whilst there may be plenty of frantic activity, there is no direct action. In the rucks and mauls the looser phases of play which cannot be reduced to an equation, they are inevitably overpowered, and are therefore forced to play more openly. As Shiggy Konno, the present manager who has been the presiding spirit of Japanese rughy for the last 20 years, says: "We make no promise about playing entertaining rugby. We want to win. But we have no alternative but to run everything."

If there are problems in the next Cardiff of course have no such problem. They will come to London, later this month itching to avenge the 34-6 humiliation inflicted upon them at the Arms Park by Harlequins last Easter. They will be conscious too of the defeats sustained at Twickenham

They will meet a team stuffed with Harlequins Wanderers' players, and the Wanderers have lost the bulk of their matches so far this season.
"Most of the players see Middlesex as the stepping stone to further honours." David Cooke, the Harlequins' captain and England flanker, said. Cooke, himself, in outstanding from this season, was uncertain whether to make himself available for county rugby last month. In the end, he did so, but he regrets the pressure placed on clubs and players which forces them to choose between the organization which commands their immediate loyalty and the more amorphous structure which higher authority suggests is the route to individual recongnition.

Cooke believes there should be some from of league system, the

The same would in the season. In other fixtures, younger players could come into the younger players could come into the sentor side and gain valuable experience, at the same time lessening the physical burden on leading players. "At the moment, as a player, I am torn about what is the right thing to do." he says, and dozens of other will support him.

dozens of others will support him. The problem with Welsh clubs, is that the fixture comes under threat if, for whatever reason, English opponents cannot put out a representative team. The game against Cardiff has a long history, stretching back to Adrsin Stoop and stretching back to Adrsin Stoop and the early days of this century. There has been some discussion within Harlequins about whether their exiles, mainly Scots and New Zealanders, should make themselves available for county games, but that is a decision which has to be left to the indiiduals concerned.

John Currie, chairman of Harle-quins, is a supporter of the divisional scheme which came into divisional scheme which came into being when he was an England selector, but wa discontinued after only three years. Association of Scientific Technical and Managerial Staffs v

Refore Mr Justice Browne-Wilkin-wn, Miss M.L. Boyle and Mrs D.

[Judgment delivered September 26]

Complaints by a member of ISTMS that the union was in breach of its political fund rules were upheld by the Employment Appeal Tribunal. The appeal tribunal dismissed an appeal by the union against a decision of the Certification Officer last February upholding a number of complaints by Mr E.M.L. Parkin. including one that expenditure by the union on investment in the development of Labour Party headquarters should have come from the political fund and not from the union's general fund. Mr Parkin cross-appealed on the ground that the Certification Officer's decision that the overdraft arrangement for the political fund did not amount to a breach of the rules was wrong.

Section 3 of the Trade Union Act. 1013, as amended, provides: "(1) The lunds of a trade union shall not he applied either difectly...or...indipolitical objects to which this section applies (without prejudice to the furtherance of any other political objects), unless the furtherance of those objects has been approved as an object of the union by a resolution...and where such resolution is enforced, unless rules, to be approved by the Certification Officer are enforced providing (a) that any payments in the furtherance of those objects are to be made out of a separate fund...

"(2) If any member of a trade union alleges that he is aggrieved by a breach of any rule . . he may complain to the Certification

(3) The political objects to which this section applies are the expenditure of money (a) on the payment of any expenses incurredby a candidate or a prospective candidate for election to Partiament or to any public office ... or (b) on the holding of a meeting or the distribution of any literature or documents in support of any such candidate or... (c) on the maintenance of any person who is a member of Parliament or who holds member of Parliament or who holds a public office; or (d) in connexion with the registration of electors or the selection of a candidate...or (c) on the holding of political meetings of any kind...unless the main purpose...is the furtherance of statutory objects within the mean-ring of this Act".

Rule 36 (a) of the union's rules provides that the union's objects should include the furtherance of the political objects to which section 3 applies and the wording of section 3 (3) (a) to (e) is incorporated.

Rule 36(b) provides that pay-

Mr Eldred Tabachnik, QC, and

MR JUSTICE BROWNE-WILKINSON said that Mr Parkin's first complaint grose out of a transaction whereby a number of trade unions affiliated to the Labour Party invested money on commer-cial terms in the development of a site at Walworth Road, SE17.

The Labour Party, through nominee company, owned the site which was intended to be used as the Labour Party he dquarters. In 1978 trade unions affiliated to the Labour Party formed an ad hoc committee to look into ways of financing the development.

could provide investment fun that, subject to its rules, a union could participate in investing in the development on a commercial investment basis, using the general or political fund. The complaint was that the union's contribution should not have come out of the general fund but out of the political fund. The complaint was upheld by the Certification Officer.

The appeal tribunal accepted the union's argument that the political objects defined by section 3(3) of the 1913 Act and rule 36(a) of the union's rules did not comprehend all possible political objects.

The union submitted that the political fund objects were to be distinguished from other political objects in two ways. First, they were party political objects as opposed to more general political objects, and second, that the common feature of all the political fund objects was that they were concerned with securing the election of members of Parliament by public communi-cation and public meetings.

Subject to a small but important point of terminology the union's first point of distinction was correct.

Political funds had long been general political purposes. There was some danger in using termin-ology which equated political forms. ology which equated political fund objects with party politics. The appeal tribunal agreed that the broad distinction was between political activity directed towards securing representation by a candidate in Parliament and other political purposes. The objection was to labelling that party political purposes, which suggested that the support of a Parliamentary or other candidate who was not a member of any party did not fall within the political fund purposes. In the appeal tribunal's judgment

The distinction was between purposes connected with representation in Parliament and other purposes. Unless and until a political fund was established, a Unless and until a union could not support any parliamentary candidate, whether belonging to the Labour Party or any other party or to no party at all, any other party or to no party at all, and, after a political fund had been established, the union had to support such a candidate out of that fund.

The rationale behind the statute was to ensure that members of a union who did not wish to were not the election or maintenance of a parliamentary representative who did not reflect their views. The appeal tribunal would appear no concluded view on whether indirect payments in furtherance of political fund purposes were prohibited by the rules, or on whether the test of "furtherance" was objective or subjective. Whatever else was comprehended in the word "furtherance," the expenditure of money in providing premises for the benefit of political party which, to the nowledge of the union, would use those premises for the purposes specified in heads (a) to (e) in the ordinary course of performing its functions, was expenditure in furtherance of those objects even

Centrocon arbitration Plovidba v Oleagine SA (The Luka Botic) Before Lord Justice Ackner and Lord Justice O'Connor [Judgment delivered September 30]

The "making of a claim in writing" within the meaning of the Centrocon arbitration clause was a step to commence arbitration proceedings. Accordingly, the court had jurisdiction under section 27 of the Arbitration Act 1950 to grant an extension of time and prevent a claim from being barred by the time limit supplated in the clause.

The Court of Appeal so stated in dismissing an appeal by Oleague SA, the owners of the vessel Luka Botic, from a decision of Mr Justice Hobbouse who had granted an extension of time to Jedranska Slobodna Plovidba, the charterers of The charterparty incorporated the Centrocon arbitration clause which provides: "All disputes from time to time arising out of this contract shall, unless the parties agree forthwith on a single arbitrator, be referred to the final arbitrament of two arbitrators carrying on business in London . . . Any claim must be made in writing and claimants' arbitrator appointed within three months of final discharge and where this provision is not complied with the claim shall be deemed to be waived and absolutely barred ...,"

Section 27 of the 1950 Act provides: "Where the terms of an agreement to refer inture disputes to arbitrator is appointed or some other step to commence arbitration proceedings is taken within a time fixed by the agreement, and a dispute arises to which the agreement applies, the High Court, if it is of opinion that in the circumstances of the case undue hardship would otherwise be caused, and notwithstanding that political fund in breach of rule 36 (h), was correct. the time so fixed has expired, may ... extend the time for such period as it thinks proper."

Mr Jeffrey Gruder for the owners; Mr Timothy Young for the LORD JUSTICE ACKNER, giving the reserved judgment of the court, said that the vessel arrived at the Lagos/Cotonou anchorage on May 1, 1980, and waited for May 1, 1980, and wanter for discharge until September 7, 1980. Discharge was finally completed on November 15, 1980, and accord-ingly the time for the commencement of arbitration expired on ebruary 15, 1981.

No claim in writing having been made, nor the owners arbitrator appointed within that period, the question arose as to whether the court had jurisdiction under section 27 to extend the time, and if it had risdiction whether it should

On December 10, 1982, Mr Justice Hobhouse was satisfied that he had jurisdiction to extend time and that it was a proper case in which to grant the required extension. The course taken before the judge was unusual because the actual hearing was devoted to whether or not he should exercise his discretion.

Mr Gruder however, took the point that the court had no power under section 27 to extend the charterers' time for making a claim in writing in view of the decision of the Court of Appeal in The Oltenta ([1982] 1 WLR 871). That was not a decision on the wording of the Centrocon arbitration clause, but on autre a different clause and it had quite a different clause and it had been distinguished by Mr Justice Lloyd in The Sandalion ([1983] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 514), a decision on the Centrocon arbitration clause.

Mr Justice Hobhouse had, a week before the application, in an unreported decision, decided the point in the same way as Mr Justice Lloyd Mr Grader therefore re-served the point and Mr Justice Hobbouse gave the owners leave to appeal specifically on the question whether on the true construction of the contract and of section 27 he had jurisdiction to make his order. Mr Gruder's point could trator. Section 27 clearly gave the court. power to extend time if the appointment of an arbitrator was not made in time, since that was one of the matters specifically referred to in the section. However, the claim in writing could not be properly described as "some other step to commence arbitration proceedings and accordingly there was no jurisdiction to grant an extension of arbitration provide that any claims to which the agreement applies shall charterparty to be put to arbitration in the City of London. It contained no time limit for commencing arbitration proceedings. Ouite separate and distinct and in no way connected with clause 24 was a typed special provision of the charterparty, namely clause M2 which provided: "Charterers shall be discharged and released from all liability in respect of any claims owners may have under this charterparty...unless a claim has been presented to charterers in writing with all available supporting documents, within 90 (ninety) days from completion of discharge of the cargo concerned under this charter-observed that that involved linking the clause M2 limit to the arbitration clause and in giving a very wide construction to the concept of taking a step to commence arbitration proceedings.

As to the linking, he had earlier observed that clause M2 had no apparent connexion with the commencement of arbitration protime. It appeared to relate solely to making a claim in a particular form within a fixed period.

He held that section 27 empowered the court to extend the time fixed for giving notice to appoint an arbitrator, appointing an arbitrator or taking some other step to commence arbitration proceedings if doing so would prevent a claim becoming time barred. It did not empower the court to extend

Their Lordships agreed with the decision of Mr Justice Lloyd in The Sandalion that nothing in The Ohenia decided that a claim in writing could not be a step to commence arbitration proceed within the meaning of section 27, if the parties so agreed. The whole of the clause with which the court was concerned related to arbitration. In The Oltenia the arbitration clause and the M2 clause were separate, distinct and unrelated. Their Lordships agreed with Mr Justice Lloyd that the appointment of the arbitrator and the making of the claim in writing in arbitration clause went hand-inhand, that both provisions were so inextricably bound together that they should be regarded as part of the same process of commencing arbitration proceedings within the meaning of section 27. The Cavalier is powered by Australian-made 1.6 litre engines ment, however, that two years after the Cavalier's original appearance, Vauxhall has still chosen to put the estate on the market with only one engine size. I do not share this view and GM is now adding Australian body panels and the special rear believe the Cavalier's 1.6 axles necessary to change a saloon into an estate car. Vauxhall's unions are unhappy about this huge inflow of parts which their memengine to be the outstanding massproduced engine of the past ten years. It develops a very healthy 90 bhp, and delivers it with such turbine-like smoothness that it is bers insist they should be making. GM's answer is simply that until Vauxhall sales reach the level where match for many of today's two

A short drive in the new estate was sufficient to indicate that Cavalier now has a worthy stablemate. It was extremely quiet for an estate, a configuration normally prone to booming and body squeaks. With only the driver aboard its uprated suspension made for a rather harsh ride, but a bag of cement in the rear transformed it.

I have been driving around recently in a rather unusual Range Rover. In place of the standard 3.5 litre V8 petrol engine was a 2.3 litre turbocharged diesel which normally powers big Peugeot saloons and estate cars. The conversion work was done by Turbo Diesel of Verwood, Dorset, and costs £2,950.

The problem with the Range Rover, even in its latest five-speed Another feature is the air guise is the heavy petrol consump-deflector built into the top of the nion resulting from its ultra strong tailgate. It is said to direct the construction, and four wheel drive.

Land Rover is well aware of this, and the need for a more economical diesel option. Unfortunately, the diesel engine used in the Land Rover is not powerful enough, and the much discussed venture with Perkins to dieselize the V8 is still more than a year away. So conversion specialists like the Dorset company are filling the gap. But the result has severe limitations. It will return in excess of 24 adequate, if driving is restricted to surfaced roads. But once on to even marginally tough going, the lack of power is very noticeable.

The nearest many Range Rovers ever get to tough going is the car park at a point-to-point after heavy rain and for most of their lives Low Drive is never engaged. For these owners and those contemplating replacing worn out petrol engines, a diesel conversion is well worth Midas touch considering.

Super Capri It is more than a year since Aston Martin Tickford a sister company of Aston Martin Lagonda, built a very special Capri for Ford's stand a bit long in the tooth.

Well now we know the outcome: a 140 mph turbocharged "super car" which begins life as a standard 2.8i Capri on Ford's assembly lines bolting GRP panels over the with its striking appearance, per-cristing bodywork which makes it formance, handling and economy, immensely strong, and easily it is in the best tradition of hand-built British sports cars.

The big dam at the front, extended side panels and large rear spoiler improve drag efficiency by 10 per cent, as well as ensuring a head turning appearance.

The already potent 2.8 V6 is fitted with a turbocharger, a Garrett Intercooler, computerized ignition, and electronic fuel management. At 2,000 rpm the power output is claimed to be twice that of the standard unit. Other modifications mpg for average use compared with to cope with the extra power 17.5 mpg for the latest Range Rover, and its performance is adequate, if driving is restricted to disc brakes at the rear and an "A" frame at the rear to locate the axle more securely.

Before it gets to Bedworth, the Capri sells for £8,653. After treatment, it costs £14,985, and you can easily add another £10,000 with optional extras such as full leather upholstery, coach finish spraying, wilton carpeting, and fatter tyres.

In the four years since it was launched, the spectacular little Midas sports car has won a host of friends, including such knowledgeable owners as Gordon Murray, chief designer of Brabham's for at the British Motor Show. It was essentially a styling exercise by been built to individual order at the Ford to test the public's reaction to a very aggressive looking piece of shire, run by Harold Dermott, With machinery. Such ploys have been used in the past to extend the life of a model, and the Capri was getting a bit long in the tooth. returns a frugal 38 to 45 mpg.

Now he is adding a special equipment version in time for Motorfair which opens at Earls Court on October 20. Delivery time near Coveniry for reworking. The £6,345 to £7,500, depending on car's appearance is transformed by specifications, it is not cheap. But bolting GRP panels over the existing bodywork which makes in the present model is already four months, and at prices from the present model is already near the four months, and at prices from the present model is already near the present model HEALTH (Channel 4, 10.30pm) is not, as I had irriagined it would be, a full-scale post-mortem into all the madical, ethical and administrative blunders that practically queued up to expose themselves in last right's opening film in G F Newman's four-part indiciment of our bospital service, The Nation's Health. It concentrates, lostead, on cancer, and the treatment of it. We saw last night what the so-called "commando procedure" did to one victim who had been wheeled into the operation theatre, never to leave it alive. The question of the alternatives to surgery was only touched on in Mr Newman's script. Toright, their merits (someone describes alternative medicine as a "medical regime") are compared with the conventional method (the "scientific

Parkinson affair Women's hand fails to rock Labour Party

Heady days: The nine Labour MPs who were among the 14 women in the 1929 Parliament. The photograph, taken from a new book, Those were the days, shows Miss Margaret Bondfield, the first woman Cabinet Minister, (centre), with (left to right): Miss S. Lawrence, Dr Ethel Bentham, Mrs M. Hamilton, Dr Marion Phillips, Lady Cynthia Mosley, Miss Ellen Wilkinson, Miss E. Pictou-Turbervill, and Miss Jenny Lee.

Women have long felt they get a bad deal in the Labour Party. As recently as 1970 Labour fielded no more than 29 candidates in a general election. At this week's Brighton con-At this week's prigmon con-ference Miss Lesley Courcou-upbraided her fellow delegates for remarks that were "foul, sexist rubbish". PHILIP WEBSTER reports on the fate of proposals debated yesterday that aimed to give women a bigger say. No one attempts to deny that women have little say in the Labour Party and nowhere is it more evident than at annual conferences.

Of the trade union delegates at Brighton this week, 91.5 per cent are male (555 men to 51 women), as are 73.9 per cent of the delegates from constituency Labour parties (447 men to 158 women) and 73.7 per cent of the representatives from socialist

Women's influence on the party's supreme policy-making body is minimal, particularly as the constituency parties where their representation is at least noticable, have less than 10 per cent of the votes at conference. In addition, only 10 of Labour's 208 MPs are women.

rejected as the unions guarded their rights to elect them and determine the political complexion of the NEC.

The move was opposed on block votes, accounting for the ground that as the NEC is about 90 per cent of conference, answerable to the conference a significant part of it should not be elected elsewhere. Labour's women activists insist that the national executive is unsympatheric to their aims. Loud protests have been made this week about the allegedly restrictive manner in which the NEC applies the rule which allows constituency parties to send an extra woman delegate if more than 1500 affiliated members are women. Miss Ann Pettifor, secretary of the action committee, claims that such action is symbolic of the innate conservatism throughout the party towards moves to increase the rights of women members. We are Lesley Courcouf: totally male dominated", she

Letter from Blenheim

Tapestry of peace woven from war

like one of those tapestry panoramas that hang in in England. English stately homes distant A small bluish hills, half hidden by light mist, autumnal fields of dull grounland other, ocforeground criss-crossed by hedges and a small stream.

You could just see the outline of the old castle at Höchstädt on the horizon. To the left the sleepy cluster of red roofs and farm buildings gave the little Bavarian village an eternal look - atthough it rose from the ashes of the settlement burnt down on that fateful August day in 1704. And there, straight ahead, rose the church spire of Blindheim, known to the English-speaking world as Blenheim.

I mentally filled in the tapestry as Herr Georg Strobel, a local teacher, pointed out the battle lines. Over there were Mariborough's troops hotfoot from their march through Germany. In the centre was the swaggering French Army, unbeaten for five years, drawn up behind the marshy Nebelbach stream (now no more than a drainage ditch). Prince Eugen, who had made a secret rendezvous with Mariborough the previous day, held his forces behind the hill beside us.

"The morning mist lifted. The French were taken by surprise. The battle began at 12.30 and raged for almost three hours until both sides paused, exhausted", Herr Strobel explained. "Then came Mariborough's breakthrough - over there, see, where the French centre was weak. It was so clever, three times he charged and withdrew. But on the fourth time the English drew their swords and stood their ground."

I could almost hear the horses neighing see the gunsmoke, blood and panic the French, under the Comte de Tallard, were beaten back to the Danube where thousands drowned the carnage was colossal at a cost of 12,000 casualties Mariborough and is Austrian allies took prisoner 13,000 Frenchmen and the hapless Bavarians who had unwisely sided with them, and killed, wounded for caused to be drowned another 18,000.

The final surrender came at dusk at Bienheim Church. "Excellency, you have just defeated the flower of the French Army", Tallard told

National Day

East Germany's National Day today marks the implementation of the country's first Constitution in 1949. The document, which had been approved by a people's congress in March of the same year formally transformed the country from a Soviet-occupied zone to the German Democratic Republic. The first Constitution was replaced by a new one in April, 1968.

The papers

The New York Times cites the grisly incident in which a condemned man in Texas was prepared for death with an injection of saline solution before a Supreme Court Justice intervened, as the clearest evidence yet of what it calls the Supreme Court's impatience with death penalty delays. Justice White found reason to stay the execution, because the Federal courts in Texas, penhaps taking a cue from Supreme Court annoyance over delays, had approved it without even addressing the defence without even addressing the denence lawyer's main argument. "Only a few hours before the full Supreme Court, by a 5-4 vote, had rejected another stay of execution, one intended to keep the prisoner alive long enough to file a petition for full Supreme Court prview of his case. That was a clear act of impatience—Five, justices seemed more Five justices seemed more interested in a prompt execution than the state itself. White's reprieve was the minimum that justice and
